SOLITUDE. - Solitude, though it may be silent as light, is, like light, essential to man. All men come into the world alone; all leave it alone King and priest, warrior and maiden, philosopher and child, all walk those mighty galleries alone. The solitude, through which in this world appals or facinates us, is but the echo of a far deeper solitude. through which already we have passed, of another solitude, deeper still, through which we have to pass,-reflex of one solitude, prefigurative of another.
