I have three kisses in my life,
So sweet and sacred unto me
That now, till death-dews rest on them,

One kiss was given in childhood's hour,

The second burned my lips for years, For years my wild heart reel'd in bliss

When my lips felt young love's first k

Had all the woe which e'er could mov

The heart of woman—it was pressed Upon the death lips of my love.

When lips have efft the dying kiss.

And felt the kiss of burning love,

And kissed the dead—then never more

In kissing should they think to move.

There was a momentary pause, and the muscles of his face worked convulsively. All pressed forward to hear his answer; for the fury with which the old miser had pursued his daughter's lover, and his declaration that he would rather see her dead than married to the young man, were known to every listener.

At length he gasped, "Yes, yes; but go at the dards, and his speech contemptible."
