Poetry. Measuring the Baby.

We measured the riotous baby Against the cottage wall— A lily grew at the threshold, And the boy was just as tall! A royal tiger lily,

With spots of purple and gold, And a heart like a jeweled chalice, The fragrant dew to hold. Without, the blue birds whistled High up in the old roof-trees, And to and fro at the window The red rose rocked her bees; And the wee pink fists of the baby

Snatching at shine and shadow That danced on the lattice sill!

Were never a moment still,

We measured the boy to-day And the little bare feet, that were dimple And sweet as a budding rose, Lay side by side together, In the hush of a long repose!

Up from the dainty pillow, White as the risen dawn, The fair little face lay smiling With the light of heaven thereon— And the dear little hands, like rose leave Dropped from a rose, lay still, Never to snatch at the sunshine That crept to the shrouded sill

We measured the sleeping baby With ribbons white as snow. For the shining rosewood casket That waited him below: And out of the darkened chamber We went with a childless moan-The height of the sinless angels Our little one had grown!

Select Tale.

FRUSTRATED

During my last visit to England, I received an invitation to spend a month at the house of a gentleman who had formerly had business relations with the firm of which I was a partner. Beechgrove was the name of Mr. Harding's estate, it was situated not very far from the town of Northwich, in Cheshire, a place famous for the extensive salt mines which exist in the vicinity, and it fully realized my beau ideal of what a gentleman's country seat should be. The spacious mansion was surrounded by gardens, tastefully laid out in parterres, in which every variety of sweet-perfumed and rich-tinted flowers that could charm the eye, or could gratify the senses. gleamed. In the well stocked deer-park wide-spreading beeches afforded shade Painting, Trimming and Blacksmith from the summer-rays, or shelter from spring showers, to the pretty fawns that roamed therein; and edging upon the game preserves, a little lake, dotted here and there with artificial islands afforded

Mr. Barton, a near relation of Mr. Harding's was incumbent of a distant parish church, and a very muscular christian to boot. Archie Edgerton was a good-natured, convivial fellow the idol of the ladies who worshiped his handsome face—the envied of the men—a general favorite with all.

DISEASES NOT LOCAL. There is a "ring" of common sense in the following that suits us, and may be profitably read by all-Doctors and patients. It is from the pen of Dio Lewis :-

But my object in this chapter is to speak of a fundamental misapprehension underlying the profession of medicine. This misapprehension is, that diseases are local.

Let me give an illustration or two.

A doctor attempts a case of catarrh. He opens the nostril with his speculum, turns in a strong light, takes a long, careful look, then examines, perhaps with a microscope, some of the fluid which the patient blows out of his nose, and then the doctor says, "Ahem! ahem! this a case of sick nose. It is a case of nasal catarrh. The pituitary membrane is congested, and is secreting a morbid mucus. Ahem! you really should have called upon me before." Then the doctor proceeds to inject various stimulating caustic fluids into the nostrils.—

Thus the total amount of duties collected was another doctor, who tells him he is very sorry that he has been so quacked, but he will make a sure cure this time. He goes Archie Edgerton, very much to Josephine's disgust and surprise, cooly drove a pretty pony-carriage, in which Amy Mostyn was seated round to the hall door.
