The paths which leads us to God's throne Seem worn by children's feet; So small, and yet so difficult
Are the ways by which we meet.

We cannot see His hidden plan, Nor read life's story through, Yet oftimes we despair, as if The work were ours to do.

Entwined cords of love and pain Lead the young children on; Why, then, should we forget to hope, And think there's nothing done.

We cannot know their childish hearts. We cannot learn their grief; Though we, too, were but children once, And years gone by are brief.

Who saw at night the stealing tear Drop on the folded sheet; Or guess what formless midnight shape Had chilled those little feet.

In our green garden plot?
Those hours among the hollyhocks,
Whose beauty fadeth not? Days when the hidden steps of Spring Were heard, not understood;

Who knew the hours of waking joy

When music from afar swept in, Born of her dreamful mood. Seasons when young Love hid his face Through, joyless, restless day!

interesting to the people of this Province just now. They say:—

In union with the Holy See and the Bishops of the Catholic world, we again renew our often repeated condemnation of mixed education as intrinsically and greviously dan-gerous to faith and morals, and tending to perpetuate disunion, insubordination, and dis-affection in this country.

Recent events known to all, and especially the acts of secret societies and of revolution ary organizations, have strengthened our con-victions and furnished conclusive evidence that Godless education is subversive not only of religion and morality, but also of domestic peace, of the rights of property and of all

As religious equality, which, according to the constitution of the country, is our inalienthe constitution of the country, is our mahenable right, is incomplete without educational freedom and equality, we demand as a right that in all the approaching legislation on the subject of education, the principle of educational equility shall be acted on.

We repudiate the pretensions of those who, holding different religious principles from ours seek to rights of temporal and eternal interests. In the present efforts to force Godless education on this country, we recognize another phase of persecution for conscience sake.—

Hence, following the example of our fathers, who sacrificed all earthly interests and life itself, rather than imperil their faith, we shall never cease to oppose to the utmost of our power the Model Schools, the Queen's Colleges, and Trinity College, and all similar institutions dangerous to the faith and morals
