THE CARRIER'S

"CARLETON SENTINEL," Woodstock, January 1, 1871

True to my pockets, to my patrons true, Your pockets and the muse once more I woo, Received your smiles, received your generous cheer, Glad I resume the duties of the year Once more my muse essay a flight in rhyme,

Thy wonted theme, the hurrying feet Sing the events of closing year and view, Its motely garb, events of false of true, See high ambition march its onward way, See glory dimn'd in premature decay, See life's strange record or of gloom or glare, Of hope elastic or of grim despair.

But how expressive that contracted leaf .. In time's dread Book. Its record strange shall bear. Results momentous, down through many Down through the circling eddies of all time, In fruits debasing, or in fruits sublime.

A year! a few short yesterday's, how brief

And to their praise our first born measures My country | glows the heart with raptures vrapt stands the patriot while the prophet's

Unveils the future of our cherished land, And points the later triumphs that shall Her stately presence with matured renown. Nature the Prophet! Lo its mystic sign On her broad breast and ample vestments

That whispers vigor to the breath of morn Where healthful air, from od'rous woods distil, From affluent river and enriching rill. Deep in dark mines, of primal wealth in Its signet glistens on the rugged ore;

Like giant hosts, the woods of centuries, Their roots deep knarled in loam that erst shall wear Thy trophied banners, industry, and bear, A golden fruitage, in profusion spread, To give accumulated millions bread. Thankful we mark the benisons that Heaven

In rich abundance, to our land has given A goodly heritage, with mercies strewn, In pleasant places this, we call our own, Here nature triumphs her unstinted hand, Unrolls the lovely and erects the grand, Spreads choicest stores in her munificence, To charm each fancy, elevate each sense, To wake each latent power of the soul And bid it struggle toward its destined goal. Our men! Not more of vigor in the flow

Of affluent rivers that to sea-ward go, Through fertile meadows, shadowy forests Or down high chasms their deep volume Than in the blood from sires inherited, Who over earth, or far or near, have spread The arts progressive and the flag unfurled,

Of independence, freedom to the world. For all these blessings, fain would weadore Divine beneficence and grace implore, So that our labors sanctified may prove Not all unworthy undeserved love; That we aspiring, constant to fulfil, The patriot mission, consecrate each will, Each power, each impulse, to the high

Of proving every source of blessing blest So earnest labor and still patient watch. Each new development of good to catch, Nerved by each new succes to effort keen, To make more noble, than the past has been, Successive triumphs, giving still elate, Our land the measure of a Queenly state.

See our loved country in a proud career, To latest ages affinent blessings bear ; See every grace that makes a nation great, Still crown her progress and direct her fate; See go, prevailing spirits, o'er the land, Religion, truth and learning hand in hand; So while true progress rears the columns vast

Such are the pictures hope and faith descry, To charm the patriot's heart, the poet's eye. But in the year some dark'ning clouds di And cast their shadows o'er 'Dominion'

Presaging dangers that in ambush lie,

To mar the splendour of our destiny Mid the rich regions of our far North West, Enwrapt in nature's most inviting vest, See treason rampant stalk with bitter taunt, And horrid murder its red ensign flaunt Before the brutal force of numbers dumb And pale, expecting evils yet to come, Our loyal brothers saw, as few 'ere saw, The British "Jack" trailed meanly in the Beneath the feet of ignorance and lust;

While rolling downward from that mystic Where the "red river's lonely waters pour,

And in a kinsman's blood its tolds deface; Wide swelled the anger of the public heart That felt in every pulse a kindred smart,

With that which tore the breast of patriot And law, along Assinaboines rich vales. So may he live an outcast like to "Cain," Ne'er to polute his former haunts again.
