SAMUEL & JAMES WATTS,
VOL. XXIII.—NO. 21.

New Albion House,
McGILL STREET,
Montreal, Canada.
THIS "NEW ALBION HOTEL," the largest Hotel in Montreal, has just been opened under the most favorable auspices.
While the "Old Albion" has been long noted for the strict attention paid to its numerous guests, the "New Albion," takes its position as a first class Hotel, and is really, first class in every respect, except the charges, which better suit the ideas and requirements of the majority of travellers, than many of the so-called, "first class Houses," which deserve the title inasmuch as they charge more than they ought to.

Already the crowded state of the "New Albion" promises well for its future career; every thing associated with its construction has been carried out with artistic taste and systematic correctness.

The large Hall, commodious office, spacious Reading Room, convenient Dining, Coffee, Wash Room, etc., on the ground floor; and the Reception Room and Saloon, and the Victoria Suite with its numerous "Jas. & Eas" and Mount Royal on the right, it cannot fail to command the eye of the traveller.

From its situation on McGill Street, the great thoroughfare and commercial centre of the City, it cannot fail to be, as the "Old Albion" has been, a strong favorite with the Merchants of Canada.

Notwithstanding the very large outlay in building and furnishing the house, the old price of $100 per week is maintained.

We, therefore, bespeak for ourselves a continuance of the patronage so liberally accorded to us during the past year.

BARKER HOUSE,
Queen Street, Fredericton.
THE attention of travellers is called to this old and favorite first-class Hotel.

Poetry.
LIGHT.
From the quickened womb of the primal gloom,
The sun rolled black and bare,
Till I wove him a thread for his Ethiopian breast
Of the vest of his golden hair;
And when the broad tent of the firmament,
Arose on its airy spars,
I penciled the hue of its matchless blue,
And spangled it round with stars.

I painted the flowers of the Eden bowers,
And their leaves of living green,
And mine were the dyes in the sinless eyes
Of Eden's virgin queen;
And when the fiend's art in the truthful heart
Had fastened its terrible spell,
In the ivory sphere of the first-born tear
To the trembling earth I fell.

When the waves that burst o'er a world asleep,
Their work of wrath had sped,
And the Ark's lone few, tried and true,
Came forth from the dead, and true,
With the wondering gleams of the bridal beams,
I had their sorrows cease,
As I wrote the roll of the storms dark scroll,
Gave the covenant of peace.

Like a pall at rest, on the senseless breast,
Night's funeral shadow fell;
Where shivered swains on Bethlehem's plains,
Their vigils kept;
When I flashed on their sight the heralds bright
Of Heaven's redeeming plan,
As they chanted the moans of a Saviour torn—
Joy, Joy, to the outcast man.

Equal favor I show to the lofty and low,
On the just and the unjust I descend;
E'en the blind, whose vain eyesphere roll
In darkness and tears,
Feel my smile the beam of a friend,
Nay, the flower of the waste by my love is embraced.

As the rose in the garden of kings,
At the chrysalis life of the worm I appear;
And lo! the gay butterfly's wings
The desolate morn, like a mourner shorn,
On the just and the unjust I descend;
E'en the blind, whose vain eyesphere roll
In darkness and tears,
Feel my smile the beam of a friend,
Nay, the flower of the waste by my love is embraced.

ly after he had followed the remains of his beloved sister to the grave, and entered the French military service, in which he still remains. He is now, the writer has understood, a captain in a hussar regiment.

Is it YOURS, SIR?—Notes and Queries has the following legend of the Black County in a recent number: Early in the present century, when Bilston was a long straggling village with one main street, which formed the part of the mail-road from London to Chester and Holyhead, the Bull's Head was the principal inn of the place, and a well-known hostelry on the Irish route. It was naturally, and almost as a matter of course, the house at which the town worthies were wont to meet, and where they would smoke home-brewed ale out of the Staffordshire black glazed pots, smoke their long Broseley pipes, and talk over the politics of the day and the titillations of the neighborhood.

One bright summer's day, while the town worthies were engaged in the modest smoking-room (coffee-rooms had not as yet come into existence), a gentleman rides up to the door, followed by his servants with the saddle-bags. There is, of course, great curiosity among the assembled guests to know who the stranger may be, and from the communicative valet they soon learn that he is an Irish officer on route to London. They become immediately desirous of his company amongst themselves, both for society and news sake; but the gentleman unobtrusively keeps his room upstairs.

So that at last, driven to desperation and perchance somewhat pot-volant, one of the company, Mr. Edward Wolley, of Stonefield, a screw-maker (i. e., of iron screws for wood), sends up the servant with his chamber key to ask the Irish officer if he can tell what time it is by an English watch.

Great anxiety ensues as to the result. Presently the servant returns with his master's compliments, and he will be down directly with the watch, and an answer. A great shuffling of feet is heard overhead, and by-and-by appears Milesius, followed by his body-guard bearing a tray with the watch and a brace of pistols on it.

He unhesitatingly announces that he is come to challenge the owner of the watch, and as he does so, he appears to be claiming it and take up one of the pistols.—(To the servant, "Take the watch round, John!" "Is it yours, sir?"

"No Sir."

"Well, then, John, since no one will own the watch, put it into my pocket; and as we do not appear to have fallen among 'jintlemen,' bring out the horses, and we'll ride on another stage."

The tale of course soon got abroad, and to the end of his career poor Wolley, or rather "Ollie," as he was most generally called, was associated with "What a clock, Mr. Ollie!" Only within a year or two of his death, while riding along quietly in his carriage, a youngurchin thus annoyed him, poor "Ollie" was taken and grievously injured.
