Poetry.

In School Days.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER

Still sits the schoolhouse by the road,

And blackberry vines are running.

The warping floor, the battered seats, The jack-knife's carved initial;

Within, the master's desk is seen,

Deep scarred by raps official;

The charcoal frescoes on its walls;

It's door's worn sill, betraying

Went storming out to playing!

Long years ago a Winter sun

Shone over it at setting;

Lit up its western window panes, And low eaves' icy fretting.

It touched the tangled golden curls,
And brown eyes, full of grieving,
Of one who still her steps delayed
When all the school were leaving.

For near her stood the little boy

Pushing with restless feet the snow

To right and left, he lingered;

The blue-checked apron fingered.

He saw her lift her eyes; he felt

The soft hand's light caressing,

"I'm sorry that I spelt the word;

Because"—the brown eyes lower fell—

"Because, you, see, I love you!"

Still memory, to a gray-haired man That sweet child face is showing,

Dear girl! the grasses on her grave

Have forty years been growing!

He lives to learn, in life's hard school,

Like her-because they love him.

How few, who pass above him, Lament their triumph and his loss,

And heard the tremble of her voice,

Where pride and shame were mingled.

Her childish favor singled:

His cap pulled low upon a face

As restlessly her tiny hands

As if a fault confessing,

I hate to go above you,

The feet that, creeping slow to school,

A ragged beggar sunning; Around it still the sumaches grow,

(From our own Correspondent.) Fredericton, April 12, 1871. This morning the Attorney General intro-duced the School bill, and it was decided to print 500 copies for the use of the House and

In reply to Mr. Crawford, the Attorney the law (?) will be introduced in about a week. This is a most important measure, seeking as it does to establish the former system of special pleading, and it is generally thought a pity it could not be brought before the House at once and referred to a committee of lawyers.
