He regarded the faults of the law to be due to its administration, and he believed had those who had brought the matter before the House taken better advice they would have had any injustice remedied. But the course taken would create an excitement which would do no good to those who had caused it. He did not altogether approve of the law, but he would defend its maintenance here as being one with which the Parliament could not interfere.

MR. WALLACE, N. B., argued at some length against interference by this Parliament with a matter purely within the jurisdiction of the Provincial The Garleton Sentinel. Legislature, and on a matter which had been dealt with in a fair and impartial spirit.
