JANUARY 1st, 1872.

The newsboy weekly plods his way

To make this his "quarter" day.

In garlands of delight profusely crowned;

Rev'lers in sun-light of great glory won;

By all the deep emotions that oppress,

The various phases of the past arise,-

But stay my muse! to us belong,

Athwart the year, just now that's past,

And here the thought occurs; though true

Still, in this age, when meet extremes

When mind no longer snail-like creeps.

But quick to vast conclusion leaps,—

Startling, important, serious, strange,

'Twere vain attempt, in lines cursory,

At points that are most salient. France,-

Now pays the war debt, but by frenzy fired,

Shows doubtful future. The republic wanes

So much there is, in our brief range,

To work up all the motely story,

Uneasy and unsettled, still the prey

To wildest theories that the mob obey

To-morrow monarchy assumes the reins,

Of power, and the next day may depart,

Perchance, to hail returning Bonaparte.

On Europe generally, I'll scarcely touch,

To point reflection, as to what may come,

For some fresh onslaught. E'en the haughty

Seems, for the time, to turn his thoughts from

But only muzzled and are being fed

And sends his son Alasis o'er the sea,

Where late he feasted, feated, gaily whiris

Have seen a people rule themselves, intent

Is it not worse the power ultra democrat?

With peculations, speculations, rings,

O'er the late fair Chicago now forlorn.

The new mementoes of her vast emprise.

But eloquent and grand the generous flow

And purse outpoured to aid the suffering west.

Britain! Old Britain, great by deeds an

Foremost 'mid nations on the scroll of fame.

That still hast lead, majestically, the van

I see thee now alas! while factions blaze,

With kindest love and fond solicitude.

Was held in seeming anger o'er the land,

As, in Thy mercy, thou has spared his life

With all the virtues that command respect,

Himself, his people, and the world to pay Homage to Him whom all the worlds obey.

And one foot on the shores of Pacific landed.

Pushing her empire toward the western star,

We've got to build a railroad, if we're able.

It smells so fishy-but that's to be proven.

From the St. Lawrence out as far as Bher-

The place where blessed memory gathers-

Brighter, the farther we may roam,

And providence our Province guides

Our farmers' strength of sturdy arms

That wealth to industry imparts;

Rewarded with o'erflowing barns,

Make golden music to the ear.

While markets opened far and near

The census that has just been taken—

Which fixed the total population,

Its totting up our hopes have shaken-

By all the cumulative arts

Where rest the ashes of our Fathers.

And now embracing distant Vancouvar,

Long may he live, and be his future rife

In each estate, and ever seek to bring

In all that benefits the world and man.

The genius of thy constitution free.

That bleeds a country so averse to Kings

With New York shoddy or New England girls

To travel in the land of liberty,

And therefore I will only glance

Of intellect; when knowledge gleams

And, as besuits, in humble rhyme,

To note the way marks that uprear

Tracing the wayward feet of time,

Their records of the eventful year.

A year is a brief space to view,

Not sentimental flight in song,

'Tis ours a retrospect to cast

The year, like garden old to ruin grown,

Du Loup. But when it's nearer realized,

'Twill be by me immortalized.

Peace, independence, virtue, stand Blest sentinels of our fair land : Learning goes forth, her golden tread, Leaves earth with glowing beauties spread Industry, vim, and enterprise. On every hand their trophies rise, To make our clothes, our hats, our shoes To make our books and print our news; Lumber is sawn on every stream ; In every town our factories gleam; Cars for our rails and engines not in-Ferior to any; cloth of cotton And cloth of wool, and tacks and nails, And brooms, and tubs and water pails, And so, ad libitum, my verse might swell. And there's the works of Small and Connell Where, " right in Town," our farmers find Things suited to their wants and mind-Stoves, plows and harrows, cultivators, Machines for planting corn and taters Threshers and cleansers, not to tire on Whatever may be made by casting iron.

Thus may it be, let virtue guide our way, Intelligence expand its gracious power, Industry nerved to enterprise obey, Then rising, grandly, o'er what clouds that Seeming adverse, our Province still shall rise Her people happy, prosperous and wise.

THE CITY OF PARIS - A GLOOMY PROSPECT FOR THE WINTER. An unusually hard season, with business dull and the working people generally out of employment, will render Paris anything but a pleasant place of residence this winter.—

As if to make matters worse, the unquiet pervading all classes, owing to the unsettled state of political affairs, adds to the universal discontent. The prospect for the winter is gloomy in the extreme. Herotofore at this season of the year the city was the seat of business, gayety and excitement. Now trade lacks activity, sprightliness is dead, and excitement, save that which portends danger to the well being of the republic, is nowhere experienced. The travellers who usually flock to the once gay capital of France are missed from the Boulevards. Business is languishing, trade is almost at a stand still, the machinery of the workshops is idle, and demoralization prevails to a serious extent.
