SCIENTIFIC FARMING.—Scientific farming consists altogether and solely in deriving the greatest possible profit from the soil. Lessen the labor and increase the yield, is the sum of the whole. To do this, everything must be done at the right time, and in the best manner. By draining, the water must be got rid of; by cultivation, weeds must be destroyed; by manure, the soil must be enriched; by rotation of crops, the largest yield must be secured; by improving stock, the feed must be ecenomized and made of more value; and the how-to-do-all this is the sum and substance of agricultural science. Books on farming relate the experience of successsul men, the experiments they have made, and the results they have attained. Any and every farmer who, by the use of his reasoning powers, is enabled to raise one bushel of corn per acre more than he has hitherto done, by improved methods, is a scientific farmer, nowever much he may disown the name; and not only has he done a good thing for himself, but the world at large is, to some extent, better for his efforts and success; his An aurora sent all the Havanese to church mission, as a man, has been to that extent than he found it .- Hearth and Home.
