Poetry.
Snow-Flakes.
Chill swept the winds over Nature's broad
bosom;
Perished the flowers once rejoicing to bloom;
Faded the verdure in beauty inspiring;
Southward the songsters their airy flight
winging.
Wanders no longer the bee 'mid the clover;
Lone are the haunts of each bright winged rover;
Fettered the fountains, whose clear, dancing
waters
Sparkle as glances of earth's fairest daughters.
Soft falls the starlight when breezes are sleeping;
Over myriad visions still shadows come creeping;
Yet gentle as starlight and mute as the shadow,
Snow flakes are falling on mountain and meadow.
Tracing in purity temples all holy;
Pausing to mark the homes of the holy Transforming the route into downy pillow;
Cresting the hill-top as foam decks the bil-
low.
Chasing dark stains from the face of creation;
As a new repentance, effacing transgression;
Softly unfolding germs opening vernal,
As drifting clouds shapen hope's eternal wing.
Vesting the sepulchres solemn and dreary,
Where peacefully slumber pilgrims earth-
worn,
Wearing no more immortality's token.
Countless the heroes on pinions immortal,
Borne on war's strife through eternity's
portal,
Soft lie the snows on the bosom beneath them,
Tender as tears, were an angel to weep them.

THE SQUIRE'S MISTAKE.
Squire Dudley was in his garden, pulling weeds in his patch of tame strawberries, on the morning when he took a fancy for Ruth Lee's pretty face. She came down the road looking fresh as a new-blown rose, in her plain calico dress and straw hat. Her brown hair, cut short, blew all about her face in little rings, and her blue eyes and bright cheeks made her as pretty a picture as one often sees. Squire Dudley saw her just as she
