The excitement incident to the Presidential election, the epizootic and the great fire, has of Bostonians as to the extent and ravages of that most odious epidemic, which has been raging in this city for the past eight months, -the Small Pox. But now that the above topics are spun to gossip's end, and the sufferers by the great calamity are being well cared for, serious thought has been turned to public safety and means of escape from this loathsome disease. If the disease is contagious, -and it is disputed by good authority,-it bids fair to desolate the greater portion of the city, there being at present nearly two thousand patients under treatment, and new cases are reported daily. In the vicinity of North and Hanover streets, which is the rendezvous of the thieves and outcasts of the city, six hundred cases were under treatment up to Saturday, the 14th inst. Most of the patients remain at their homes, as at present thay are not compelled to go to the hospital, where, on account of the large number already quartered there, they have been greatly neglected; nor is the red flag generally The Garleton Sentinel. displayed from the infested houses, the merchants and traders doing business on the fated streets, claiming that it would have a tendency to drive trade to other directions; a weak argument, you may think, but I will venture the assertion, that were the signal Brick Building, up stairs. shown upon every street where the disease exists, nearly every female whom we every day meet parading the streets would be found in her place, -either at work or at home. -One day last week a physician entered a Cambridge horse-car, and in a few moments he was noticed to step upon the platform and speak in an undertone to the conductor, who rather reluctantly entered and passed through the car, closely scanning the occupants; at the forward end sat a veiled lady; he abruptly raised her veil, and exhibited to Numerous are the preventatives heralded by are thinking of the beginning. the newspapers; the Journal says tobacco is efficacious, and the tobacconists are reaping a harvest; another daily says Medford rum
