ORIGINAL METHOD OF STEALING.—A young fellow, named Mitchell, recently caught in Louisville attempting to rob a house, was recognized as a notorious thief, who, three years ago, carried out on a method of robbery. He raised a pet cow and so trained that animal that whenever its master would get it down upon the ground it would run immediately into the nearest house. Mitchell would take his cow about the streets in his arms, ostensibly for the purpose of showing it to a friend, and when in front of a residence he would wheel to enter he would take the cow down. In an instant the well-trained animal would scamper towards the house, and the master would follow in pursuit. If there happened to be an opening anywhere about the house, the cow would be sure to find it and enter the house at once. Of course the people of the house would allow the master to come in after his pet, and while the family and servants were lending a helping hand to effect the capture of the rascally Mitchell would have himself out with every opportunity by picking up little things here and there in the rooms in which they passed after the slippery little beast. Mitchell kept up this smart little game quite successfully for some time, but was finally caught, and sent to the penitentiary.

In a suit brought against a life insurance company in St. Louis to recover $10,000 insurance, which was tried last week, one of the grounds of defence was that the insured had been addicted to drunkenness, while he had stated to the company's examiner that he was sober and temperate in his habits, and had always been so. The question of what constitutes a drunkard having thus been raised, Mr. Francis Garvey, an attorney, was put on the stand to enlighten the Court and the jury as to this point. Mr. Garvey testified that a man who drinks after dinner or at night is not a drunkard. A drunkard, said Mr. Garvey, is a man who gets drunk or drunks whenever he can get at liquor. If a man gets drunk in the daytime he is a man of no character, but if he drinks in his own house all night there can be no objection to it. As a legal definition, it is generally considered that a man who is addicted to drunkenness and is self-sacrificing, Mr. Garvey's opinion is of interest.

How to Love Tricy.—Many women suppose that they love when, unfortunately, they have not the beginning of an idea what love is. Loving to be deceived by a man—loving to be petted by him, and loving to be caressed by him—loving to be praised by him; is not loving a man. All these may be when a woman has no power of loving at all; they may all be simply because she loves herself, and loves to be flattered, praised, caressed, and fed with cream, and have a warm corner. But all this is not love. It may exist, to be sure, where there is love, but generally does. Love, dear ladies, is self-sacrifice; it is life out of self and in another.

A vacant mind takes all the meaning from the finest face. A sensual disposition deforms the handsomest features. A cold, selfish heart shrivels and distorts the best looks. A mean, covetous spirit takes all the dignity out of the figure and character out of the countenance. A cherished hatred transforms the most beautiful lineaments into an image of repulsive ugliness.

A swell clerk, from London, who was spending an evening in a country inn full of company, made the following offer: "I will drop money into a hat with any man in the room; the man who holds out longest to have the whole and treat the company." "I'll do it," said a farmer. The swell dropped in half a sovereign. The countryman followed with a sixpence. "Go on," said the swell. "I will do it," said the farmer. "Take the whole and treat the company."

"Colored W.—is a fine looking man," said Jenkins. "Yes," said Noggins. "I was taken for him once." "You? why you are as ugly as a stump fence." "I can't help that, I was taken for him. I endorsed his note, and was taken for him by the sheriff."

A rumrunner died and his better half, on the score of prudence, took one of the best horses which she owned, and having had it pointed over and his name with age, etc., put on, and used it instead of a head stone to his grave. The rain washed off the name and all the new paint and left the inscription—"N. E. Rum."

TEACHING.—When a father takes up a child to show him pictures, ten to one he holds the book at such an angle as to suit his own vision, and not that of the little one. Yet the little one's sight is the one to be favored. How true it is that the preachers and teachers of religious truth too often hold up where they can see it, and not where those of whom they have charge can best see it.

Parents may do all that they can to develop an upright and virtuous character in their children, and apparently in vain. It seems like bread cast upon the waters and lost. And yet sometimes it happens that long after the parents have gone to their rest—it may be twenty years—more—the good seed, the good example set before their sons and daughters in childhood, spring up and bear fruit.

An Illinois grave-digger, who buried a man named Buttrick, sent a bill to his widow as follows:—"To making one Buttrick, $2.50."

"Say, Sam, what do you call hash, anyhow?" "Call it," says Sam, "I call it a gross insult to a good square meal."
