Self-Respect.

When we use the expression " self-respect we do not mean " self-esteem." These terms are widely different. The one is the basis of all that is noble and manly, the other is the meanest of all puerilities. Self-esteem looks with complacency upon our meritoriousness either real or assumed; self-respect recognizes our abilities and the obligation we are ence, 6s, Royal Navy, 8s, Iron Clad, 6s. under to use them. Self-esteem is satisfied with what has been accomplished; self-respect, feeling the power to do, ever strives to do; self-esteem, ever looking at the past, makes the vain; self-respect, conscious of the privileges and opportunities of the present and of the ability to enjoy and improve them, makes the self-sufficient or proud man. Vani- TOBIQUE PLASTER. ty is a contemptible folly, pride a commend-

The self-respectful man does not fret or repine. He knows that things are not as they ought to be; that they are to be righted. Life to him means work. The world around him is a field to be cultivated, so with a brave heart, he addresses himself to his share of the In the matter of Charles L. Richards, an Insolvent. culture. Let us, although said estate, to appear before me at a Court of Probate, to be held at my office, in the Town of Woodstock, within and for the County of Carleton, surrounded by trials, heed the impassioned on Wednesday, the sixteenth day of October next, injunction of one whose heart felt the truth passing, allowing and proving said accounts, as which his muse uttered:

"Stand like an anvil, when the sparks Fly far and wide a fiery shower, Virtue and truth must still be marks Where malice shows its want of power.

Stand like an anvil, when the bar Lies red and glowing on its breast; Let virtue be life's guiding star, And conscious innocence its rest

Stand like an anvil, when the sound Of pondrous hammers pains the ear— Thine be the still and stern rebound Of the great soul which knows no fear.

Stand like an anvil-noise and strife Are born of earth, and die with time; The soul, like God, its source and birth, Is conscious, calm, serene, sublime."

The Joy of Loving.

To love is the great glory, the last culture, the highest happiness; to be loved is little in comparison. Amongst our strangely complicated relationship of life, it often seems as if the loved one had all the advantage. To him the service, for him the sacrifice; from him, the highest happiness; to be loved is little in perhaps, no return. You pity some deluded mother, impoverishing herself for a reprobate son, who laughs as he spends her little hoard. Do not pity-admire her, rather; she is happier than a thousand reprobates. She loves. Oh, it one really existed, as I and others believe, who loved the world, and in some inexplicable way suffered for its salvation, he was a god, at least in his sublime happiness. Nor should I say that it was a "religion of sorrow," that such a love had inaugurated.

The possession of virtue makes a man illustrious though poor, and declares his pedigree more ancient than the stars.

The pleasantest things in the world are pleasant thoughts, and the greatest art in life is to have as many of them as possible.

If a cause be good, the most violent attacks of its enemies will not injure it so much as injudicious defence of it by its friends.

CURE of BRONCHITIS.

SMITHFIELD. J. C. CHAMBERLAIN, Esq.—This is to certify that about three years ago I became afflicted with Bronchitis, which lasted about eighteen months.—
I was so afflicted for the want of breath that it was I was so afflicted for the want of breath that it was frequently throwing the clothes off and raising in the bed to keep from strangling. I tried three of Shoshonees Remedy. I bought a bottle and took it, and when it was about finished I began to feel a little better. I continued to use it until I had taken three bottles, when, to my satisfaction, I found that I was as well as ever I had been previous to my illness, and have been so ever since.
