Many years ago, when as yet there was but one church in the old town Lyme, Connecticut, the people were without a pastor. They had been for a long time destitute, and now were on the point of making a unanimous call for a very acceptable preacher, when a crossgrained man, by the name of Dorr, began a violent opposition to the candidate, ral lied a party, and threatened to defeat the settlement. At a Parish meeting, while the matter was under discussion, a halfwitted fellow rose in the house, and said he wanted to tell a dream he had last night. He thought he died, and went away where the good people go, and as soon as Satan saw him "he asked me where I came from."
