(From our own Correspondent.)

A fire broke out on Summer Street in this city, Saturday evening at about 8 o'clock. which before its flames could be controlled swept through the entire wholesale portion of Boston. When the fire commenced it was not supposed that anything very serious need be apprehended, and many people who had visited the scene of conflagration retired to their homes at about ten o'clock, relying up on the ability of the firemen to quench th flames. About 12 o'clock, however, appearances indicated that Boston was about to Water street, below the new Post Office, is
