In the first place it is necessary to gather a lot of stock before we can call it a fair. whether horses, cattle, sheep, swine, or manufactured articles, it makes little difference if they be desirable property and in demand by the buyers that we intend shall patronize our fair; the disposal therefore of the amount will be the cash encouragement to cause owners and raisers to bring their stock. I panied by the money to ensure insertion. bring a certain number of heads of stock, and the Society guarantee a certain remuneration tions $1.00. for each head brought; it would be well to have the different kinds of animals mention-ed on the list, so we could in our advertisements to outsiders (as our American cousins say) specify a certain number and hold out a prospect for a much larger one. In the event of owners of stock disposing of it, of course then we should be relieved from the payment of the sum offered as a bonus or inducement for bringing said stock to the fair. Now about the buyers: I have talked with
