Poetry.
Individual and Universal Action.
FROM THE GERMAN.
Action, action, action, action!
Never tiring, never ceasing;
At each step with new born power,
Like the mountain stream increasing.
Up, thou earnest! up and doing!
Till alone can win the road;
Onward, upward, still pursuing,
And, and leave the rest to God!
It is true, thou art a trifle,
Sport of every passing wave,
That, with one quick plunge, could stifle,
And give thee a watery grave.
Thou canst not one fast alter
In the heavens or on the earth;
Could a heavenly being falter
To a thing of mortal birth?
Well, thou mayest cry in sorrow,
"All day long I am but vain;
What is built today, tomorrow,
Must be all built o'er again!"
Know this truth, and cease complaining.
Hope will have her true soul—
Thou art but a single atom
Of a universal whole.
In the cycle of Creation,
Till not for thyself alone;
In thy brother's joy salvation,
In his ruin, too, thine own.

Unconscious Influence.
As men are unconscious of how much happiness they unwittingly cause, so they may do a great deal more good than they think;
they may do a great deal intending it, but no man ever works strongly and boldly and wholeheartedly, but what I think he does more without knowing it than he does knowing it. It is not what you say to your class, teacher, that measures the influence that you are exerting upon them. If you are faithful, if your heart is in the work, it is not that of which you can make statistics in the social circle that measures your influence there. Far more influence comes with activity than is shown by the immediate fruit of that activity.
The shadow of Peter worked just as much as Peter's body itself worked; and genuine men and women work both by substance and by shadow—by purpose and by unconscious influence. There are many who devote to the work of the church, and yet devote to conform to the disposition of their Master and to carry themselves through life wisely and well, who will wake up by and by when they stand in the presence of the revealing eye with sweet surprise and adoring gratitude, to see how much more after all,
their life meant than they themselves thought.
In your boyhood you will very well remember, your used to write with invisible ink;
and there was nothing for the recipient to do,
but take the paper and hold it over the fire and straightway came the message—
There is much writing with invisible ink in this world. There is a great deal of trumpet-ing activity. There is also a great deal of activity which does not report itself to the senses, but which is powerfully influential—namely, a godly life; patient continuance in well doing; attainment in humility, fidelity, truth; standing faithful to the end in the place where God has put you. You cannot tell what you are doing. No man can tell it to you. You are writing with invisible ink on the hearts of children's hearts; on the hearts of passers-by; on the hearts of friends and neighbors; on the hearts of those whom you meet in every circle where you move—
There are a thousand influences radiating from you in your life which will bring forth their seeds abundantly in the Kingdom of God's glory.—H. W. Beecher.

Select Tale.
Florence's Thanksgiving.
BY JANE GRAY SEEVER.
Florence Parleigh and I had been school girls together, and loved each other as sisters, and it was a hard stroke to me when, she came one day, all smiles, and her deep blue eyes a shade deeper and sparkling like two sapphires set in brilliant of the first water, and whispered confidently into my ear—ready car her dearest attentions.
Her joy was so great, her happiness so serene, that her voice trembled with emotion, so that at first it was scarcely audible, when she bent her head so near mine that the yellow curls touched my cheek, and she whispered—
"Marian, Marian, I—I have promised to marry Arthur Armesdale," and her lips touched my forehead and chilled me to the heart with their icy chillness, and she sank down at my feet perfectly helpless.
I raised her in my arms, for she was a tiny thing, and laid her on the sofa. She had not fainted, but seemed to have lost all volition in the great reaction which this anticipated event had caused her.
My tears fell and dropped upon the marble-like face of my dearly loved friend.
Now, I didn't love Arthur Armesdale that made me so much dislike to see my friend's wife, but I did love Flora, and notwithstanding the fact that the bridegroom elect, so far as we knew, had always been an unblemished reputation, and belonged to an aristocratic family, I had a strange presentiment that my darling Flora would not be happy with him.
But it only lacked a month of Thanksgiving, and that was to be the day of all others in the year to mark the great epoch in her life, and there was not much time to spend in forebodings.
The eventful day at last arrived. I dressed Flora, for she did not wish her maid to perform that service, and then she arrayed myself in the plain white silk which had been Flora's present to me for the occasion, for I was poor and only managed to support myself by my daily rounds of visits to my pupils.
The ceremony was over, and I saw them off on the midnight train on their wedding tour.
I heard often from Flora, but the tone of her communications seemed to be constrained, and not fully herself. However they would be home before the Christmas holidays, and so I tried to content myself with the belief that all was well.
I had forgotten to inform my readers that Flora was an orphan and an heiress, and under the guardianship of a very worthy bachelor uncle, (he wasn't very old though), and who had purchased a very beautiful country home —I might say a mansion—and invited me to assist in the selection of the furniture, and so we had the house all ready for the reception of the happy couple one night a week before Christmas. John, the coachman, had been despatched to meet the 10 o'clock train, with strict orders from Uncle Mason (for was Flora's uncle's name) to bring them straight to the new house without a word of explanation, for this house was not bought with Flora's money, but was Uncle Mason's present to the bride.
At last the sound of carriage wheels rattled on the pavement, and stopped in front of the house, which had been illuminated as brilliantly as the four and twenty parterre burners of the house.
Uncle Mason and I both rushed to the outer door, and in an instant Flora was in my arms, sobbing as though her heart would break, and apparently oblivious of the splendor about her.
My own tears also rained down my cheeks, but whether from joy or sorrow I scarcely knew, but it seemed to me it was a blending of the two. I just glanced at Uncle Mason in time to see him brush away a big tear from the back of his hand, which glistened on his slightly furrowed cheek, like a dew-drop on the half parched grass.
"Come, come now girls, that's enough of that amusement," his own voice a little unsteady, and believing, good man that he was, that all of these tears were from happiness and gratitude, and not from anything pertaining to sorrow. "Come I say, girls, that's enough, here's Arthur and no body but an old man to welcome him," cried Uncle Mason at the same time shaking the bridegroom heartily by the hand.
I raised Flora's head from my shoulder and then Uncle Mason came and just put his protecting arm around her, and pressed her to his heart, saying:
My poor little puss, don't cry so, or you will spoil all my happiness now, in being the door of this beautiful house. See now, look about you darling, isn't it pretty?
"Oh! Uncle, it is beautiful, more than beautiful, and you are too good to your poor Flora."
I had shaken hands with Arthur by this time, and asked after his health, and had promised several other foolish questions in a confused manner, when Uncle Mason called me to assist Flora in laying aside her outer wrappings, for she had now become more comely. And so I took my darling by the hand and led her up to her own room.
"Oh, yes, it is lovely," she replied in a half abstracted manner, to my question how she liked it?
"But Marian," she said, "you must give up teaching and live with me, my sister, my friend, my guide, promise me here in this room never to desert me, I have enough for us all; Uncle Mason has been a very provident guardian, and has settled by comparatively small fortune into a large one; besides he is rich himself, and would refuse me nothing. And," she added after a moment's hesitation, "I need, I must have your care and sympathy."
And so before we descended to the parlors where the few friends who had been invited to meet the wedding pair, had assembled, I had given my word to remain an inmate of the Armesdale mansion; for I knew that Flora was in trouble, that there was some secret hidden away down in the innermost recesses of her heart, which she had not the strength to tell at present, and so I said, putting my hand in hers, and pressing my lips to her pale cheek, "I'll stay, Flora." And then we went down to find Uncle Mason pacing the corridors, and looking just a little anxious, for he, too, had begun to fear that something was out of the ordinary course.
"Marian, don't cry like that just for being married to a man of your choice, for nothing," he said.

Poetry.
Individual and Universal Action.
FROM THE GERMAN.
Action, action, action, action!
Never tiring, never ceasing;
At each step with new born power,
Like the mountain stream increasing.
Up, thou earnest! up and doing!
Till alone can win the road;
Onward, upward, still pursuing,
And, and leave the rest to God!
It is true, thou art a trifle,
Sport of every passing wave,
That, with one quick plunge, could stifle,
And give thee a watery grave.
Thou canst not one fast alter
In the heavens or on the earth;
Could a heavenly being falter
To a thing of mortal birth?
Well, thou mayest cry in sorrow,
"All day long I am but vain;
What is built today, tomorrow,
Must be all built o'er again!"
Know this truth, and cease complaining.
Hope will have her true soul—
Thou art but a single atom
Of a universal whole.
In the cycle of Creation,
Till not for thyself alone;
In thy brother's joy salvation,
In his ruin, too, thine own.

Unconscious Influence.
As men are unconscious of how much happiness they unwittingly cause, so they may
do a great deal more good than they think;
they may do a great deal intending it, but no
man ever works strongly and boldly and
more without knowing it than he does knowing it. It is not what you say to your class, teacher, that measures the influence that you are exerting upon them. If you are faithful, if your heart is in the work, it is not that of
which you can make statistics in the social
circle that measures your influence there. Far more influence comes with activity than is
shown by the immediate fruit of that activity.
The shadow of Peter worked just as much as Peter's body itself worked; and
genuine men and women work both by substance and by shadow—by purpose and by
unconscious influence. There are many who
devote to the work of the church, and yet
devote to conform to the disposition of their Master and to carry themselves through life
wisely and well, who will wake up by and
by when they stand in the presence of the
revealing eye with sweet surprise and adoring
gratitude, to see how much more after all,
their life meant than they themselves thought.
In your boyhood you will very well remember, your used to write with invisible ink;
and there was nothing for the recipient to do,
but take the paper and hold it over the fire
and straightway came the message—
There is much writing with invisible ink
in this world. There is a great deal of trumpet-ing activity. There is also a great deal of activity which does not report itself to the
senses, but which is powerfully influential—
namely, a godly life; patient continuance in
well doing; attainment in humility, fidelity, truth; standing faithful to the end in the place where God has put you. You cannot tell what you are doing. No man can tell it
to you. You are writing with invisible ink
on the hearts of children's hearts; on the hearts of passers-by; on the hearts of friends
and neighbors; on the hearts of those whom
you meet in every circle where you move—
There are a thousand influences radiating
from you in your life which will bring
forth their seeds abundantly in the Kingdom of God's glory.—H. W. Beecher.

Select Tale.
Florence's Thanksgiving.
BY JANE GRAY SEEVER.
Florence Parleigh and I had been school
girls together, and loved each other as sisters,
and it was a hard stroke to me when, she came one day, all smiles, and her deep blue
eyes a shade deeper and sparkling like two
sapphires set in brilliant of the first water,
and whispered confidently into my ear—ready
car her dearest attentions.
Her joy was so great, her happiness so
serene, that her voice trembled with emotion, so that at first it was scarcely audible, when
she bent her head so near mine that the yellow
curls touched my cheek, and she whispered—
"Marian, Marian, I—I have promised to marry Arthur Armesdale," and her lips touched
with their icy chillness, and she sank down
