Poetry.

A MYSTERY.

The river hemmed with leaning trees Wound through its meadows green; A low blue line of meadows showed The open pines between.

One sharp tall peak above them all Clear into sunlight sprang; I saw the river of my dreams The mountains that I sang!

No clew of memory led me on, But well the ways I knew; A feeling of familiar things With every footstep grew.

Not otherwise above its crag Could lean that blasted pine; Not otherwise the maple hold, Aloft its red ensign.

So green and low, the meadow fold Its red haired kine asleep. The river wound as it should wind; Their place the mountain took, The white, torn fringes of their clouds,

So up the long and shorn foot hills

The mountain road should creep,

Yet ne'er before that river's rim Was pressed by feet of mine, Never before my eyes had crossed That broken mountain line.

Wore no unwanted look.

A presence strange at once to know, Walked with me as my guide The skirts of some forgotten life Trailed noisless at my side. Was it a dim remembered dream?

Or glimpse through wons old? The secret which the mountains kept, The river never told. But from the vision ere it passed,

A tender hope I drew,

And, pleasant as a dawn of spring, The thought within me grew. That love would temper every change, And soften all surprise,

And misty with the dreams of earth, The hills of heaven arise. -J. G. Whittier, in the Atlantic Monthly,
