Poetry.
The Cross on the Deck.
BY WADE ROBINSON.

All behind the dreary voyage, and the homes How lonely and the marriage glides Like a maiden to her marriage glides The vessel to the shore.

Like a maiden through the moonlight and the watcher's eager eyes, Catch the shadowy capes and headlands, standing spectral in the skies.

Lo! a wreath of smoke is twisting like a snake along the pipes.
Sudden, all a pent volcano, through the roaring hatches breaks!

See them crowding from the cabins, dumb in terror and despair!
Men and women and young children, with white cheeks and blowing hair.

O, the flames so wild and busy, how they swing along the ropes.
How they dance with crackling laughter round a hundred dying hopes.

Quick the boats are lowered and laden, and with flashing oars they fly.
For the strong have won their safety, and the weak are left to die.

Now amid the rush and anguish, see the gentle Captain stands, With a tone of quiet pleading, and a gleam of lifted hands.

And he says, "O, gather forward where the decks are cool and wet, I will guide the homeward vessel; trust me, I will save you yet."

They are spouting water upward on the corridor and main deck, And the canvas still is stretching, still is bending with the gales.

And around him floor and gurnale sear and black, and bend and split, And the strong heart dries within him at the fury of the heat.

And the land grows nearer, clearer, and the pure and peaceful dawn Gaugy, golden, screening darkness, over all the heaven is drawn.

Little clouds of pink and yellow, do ye ever, floating there, Peep past our beauty down on sorrow and despair?

Now a hundred hearts are beating with a sweeter, calmer beat, O, and one is leaving slower with the broken step of death.

For his fingers scorched and yellow have forgotten how to feel, Clutching still with failing sinews at the hot and blazing wheel.

And the staring eyes can only see the land becoming near,
And the boats that hasten toward them, and the crowds that run to cheer.

"Saved!" his people cry before him. "Saved!" the echoing herald cries.
"Saved!" he gasps, and waves his hand, and sinks upon the main and dies.

Write his name below his Master's, with the For, like him, he saved others, but himself he could not save.

Select Tale.
THE LITTLE LADY.

I was stopping at the Hotel Windsor, at Rue de Rivoli, Paris.
One morning I was smoking in the colonnade, when a tall, elegantly dressed gentleman asked permission to light his cigar by my pipe. I saw at once that he was a Frenchman, although his "English" was nearly perfect.

"Have you heard the news?" he inquired.
"No."
"Is it possible! Why, all Paris is alive with it at this moment."

"What has happened?"
"The Countess de Marville, the fairest of the fair, was found murdered in her bed last night, her bureau broken open and ten thousand francs missing from it.
It was terrible! The brute who did the deed effected his entrance through the window of her chamber, near which, unfortunately, was a tall tree planted by the distinguished grandfather of the Countess years ago. Little did he imagine what a terrible use would be made of it."

The Countess, however, was a man more than a woman thus in cold blood is more than I can imagine."
"Ah, monsieur, if you had ever seen the Countess you would wonder still more. She was beautiful—beautiful as an angel, he added, stroking his whiskers with an unmistakable air of vanity. I knew her well."

"Indeed."
"Oh, yes. There are in Paris few people more unknown to me." His manner was now decidedly censured, and I felt disgusted. My coldness evidently repelled him, for he soon left me.

Afterwards I heard from others accounts of the late tragedy.
Among the details of the affair was one which peculiarly impressed me—and which my first informant had not spoken of—an oversight which surprised me, as the Countess had not been mentioned of that kind which would be most apt to strike the fancy.

Upon the throat of the Countess the murderer, in throttling her, had left a mark from a ring he wore—the impression of a chariot wheel with a star in the centre.

"This," said my last informant, "may lead to the discovery of the murderer.
Jean Mosquieu is already visiting the jewellers' shops to find out from which and by whom a ring with a chariot wheel device was purchased."

"Who is Jean Mosquieu?"
"What, Mosquieu, our famous detective? Although his courage is well known, you would not, to look at his fair, delicate face and form, believe that he could fight a bear."

A week later I was aboard the steamer, bound from Calais to Dover.
Among the passengers I beheld one whose face looked familiar to me. I was not long in recognizing this person as the same I had seen in front of the Hotel Windsor, and who had first informed me of the murder of the Countess.

He was certainly a very handsome man, although his concealed air was a blot upon his good looks.
He moved languidly hither and thither, turning his brown eyes solemnly upon the pretty lady passengers, while stroking his whiskers with one white hand, upon the middle finger of which was a superb diamond ring.

The handsome passenger stood as if frozen to the deck, making no resistance as the lady in black slipped a pair of handkerchiefs over his wrists.

"By what right," he then stammered,
"do you?"
He paused as the other threw off her dress and false hair, revealing the person of a slender man with delicate, girlish features.

"I am Jean Mosquieu, the detective!" he quietly remarked, "and I robbed the sea of this man that the sea-fold might not be cheated."

There is a little more to add. The main proof having been obtained, other proofs on the prisoner's trial were brought forth, showing him guilty beyond doubt.
Long before his execution his name was ascertained to be Louis Rosseaux, a noted adventurer and gambler, who, however, by cool effrontery and a winning address, backed by his good looks, had been enabled to move among the first circles of Parisian society.

A curious story of a dentist's revenge comes from Paris. M. Sandre, while returning from a visit to a patient, heard sounds of distress, and hastened to succor a person who lay on the side of the road. This individual sprang up suddenly and rushed on M. Sandre, who knelt down with his hands and feet, and begged for mercy. The mal-factor soon recovered and asked to be released. The dentist told him that he could only escape on condition that he should sacrifice a tooth. After some discussion it was agreed that the tooth should be delivered to the forensic, and the dentist having seated his victim on a stone extracted an enormous molar by the light of the moon.

Many people complain of their bad luck, when they ought to blame their own want of wisdom and action. Mr. Cobden, a distinguished writer in England, thus wrote about luck and labor:
"Luck is everything waiting for something to turn up.
Labor, with keen eye and strong will, will turn up something.
Luck lies in bed, and wishes the postman will bring him news of a legacy.
Labor turns out at 6 o'clock, and with busy pen and ringing hammer, lays the foundation of competence.
Luck whistles.
Labor whistles.
Luck lies on chance.
Labor on character.
Luck slips down to Indigence.
Labor strides upward to Independence."

A traveller, on his arrival in the city, stopped for a moment to examine a coat hanging in front of a clothing store, when the prorietor rushed out and asked, "Wouldn't you try on some coats?" "I dunno but I would," replied the traveller, consulting his timekeeper; and he went in and began to work.
No matter how often he found his fit, he called for more coats, and after he had tried on thirty he looked at his watch, again resumed his own garments, and walked off, saying: "I won't change a coat for what I've done.
Hang a man who won't oblige another when he can do it! If I'm ever around this way again, and you've got any more coats to try on, I'll do all I can to help you!"

Idle women, says a writer, speak of money as if it were something that men went out purchasing for pleasure, and gathered from well laid bushes, when in reality, the means for providing food and shelter for a family often demands severe privations and hardships. Constant labor from day to day, early and late, is not a joke, by no means. Headaches comes from planning, counting, figuring and arranging; heartaches from disappointment and frustration. Often a man goes home at night, footsore and weary of the strife.

A country merchant who had been dunned a number of times for a bill he claimed to have already paid, finally sent the bill to the firm and wrote as follows: "Please, if you can, send me a receipt that will last until the appearance of the angel that stands with one foot on land and proclaims that time shall be no more, and oblige, yours, etc." The senior partner replied, enclosing the receipt, as follows: "This receipt runs from the creation of the world, and is good for the above amount until time shall be no more, however that fact may be announced to the public."

It is said that a man named Sherwood claims to be the owner in fee of Captain Jack's body the moment that distinguished savage vacates it. He shows a receipt for the money which he paid Jack in consideration of a promise to leave the country. The officials are inclined to take the peculiar position that the body is not Jack's to dispose of. Mr.
Sherwood wants to embalm it, and carry it about for exhibition, evidently believing with Tricou, that when people "will not give a dot to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian."

It is said King Lunaldi, of the Sandwich Islands, is very sick and likely to die, and that in view of that event there are plots going on among four claimants to seize the throne. It will be a dignified scramble. It appears that one David Kalakaua is making formidable preparations. He has organized a military company which he drills every evening, but the terrors of this movement are somewhat mitigated by the fact that they have no arms, and though David has delivered seventy rifles they are not likely to be ordered as he has no money to pay for them.

A tourist, writing from Capers, says—Gen. Garibaldi enjoys tolerably good health, this being the first year he has not suffered from his usual pains. He always takes his morning walk, and returns at ten. At the time Marsala, a mare given to him by the city of that name in 1860 at the famous exposition of the Thousand, comes up the down of the general to receive few crusts of bread from his hand."
