Feminine Beauty.

The loveliest adornment of perfect womanhood is unassuming modesty. If the woman possessed of this rare virtue is lacking in physical beauty, may even plain, there is a charm in her innocence and simplicity more potent than the smiles of the fairest featured of men. There is something in the presence of a calm and potent woman that, be she ever so fair, repels rather than attracts admiration. She is regarded only for the symmetry of her face and features, and like a cold and senseless statue of stone, her eyes never change or lose their fixed and soulless expression; they never lighten up with the beauty of thought nor sparkle with the consciousness of any new and sublime idea; their changes look not the response of peace, nor the steady gaze of unchanging happiness; it is only the fixed stare of a hermit, worldly woman, whose only thought is of herself, who is ever unbecomingly to the pleasure of the soul to others—an expression of unchangeable selfishness.

True beauty lies in the hidden perfection of the soul. The most lovely type of womanhood is the being whose heart is not susceptible to refusal and tender feeling that angles and bends itself with every net and deed of her life. No feminine face is truly beautiful that does not wear, to a certain extent, an expression of enlightenment and repose. It is said: "Do not think you can make a girl lovely if you do not make her happy. There is no more restraint you put on a good girl's nature—there is not one check you give to her instincts of affection or of effort which will not be indelibly written on her features with a hardness which is all the more painful because it takes away the brightness from the eyes of innocence, and the charm from the brow of virtue. The perfect loveliness of a woman's countenance can only consist in the majestic peace which is found in the memory of happy and useful years, full of sweet recollections; and from the joining of this with that yet more majestic confidence, which is full of change and promise, opening a life, modest at once and bright with hope of better things to be won and to be bestowed. There is no age where there is still that promise—it is eternal youth."—Lodge.

Female Taste.

A cultivated taste marks a woman of elegance and refinement as decidedly as a knowledge of classical literature does a gentleman, and there is nothing in which female vulgarity is more clearly shown than in want of taste. This is an axiom that we think will not admit of dispute, but it is a question how far taste is natural and how far it may be acquired. A delicate taste must to a certain extent depend upon the organization of the individual, and it is impossible for any rule to be laid down which will impart taste to persons entirely devoid of it. But this is very seldom the case with women, as it is one of the few points in which women naturally surpass men. Men may be, and probably are, superior to women in all that requires profound thought and general knowledge, but in the arrangement of a house and the introduction of ornamental furniture and articles of taste, there can be no doubt of the innate superiority of women. Every one must have remarked the difference in the furnishing of a bachelor's house and one where a lady presides; the thousand little elegances of the latter, though unnoticed by themselves, add, like spices, prodigiously to the value of the solid articles to which they are appended.

Curious Facts about Water.

The extent to which water mingles with bodies apparently the most solid is very wonderful. The glittering object which beauty wears as an ornament is only flint and water. Of every two hundred tons of earth which a landlady has in his estate four hundred are water. The snow-capped summits of our highest mountains have many million tons of water in a solidified form. In every glacier of Paris state which an Italian carries through our streets for sale there is one pound of water to four pounds of chalk. The air we breathe contains five grains of water to each cubic foot of its bulk. The potatoes and turnips which are boiled for our dinner have, in their raw state, the one seventy-five per cent, and the other ninety per cent, of water. If a man weighing one hundred and forty pounds were squeezed in a hydraulic press, seventy pounds of water would run out, the balance being solid matter. A man is, essentially speaking, forty-five pounds of carbon and other elements, with nitrogen, diffused through five and a half pounds of water. In plants we find water thus mingling no less wonderfully. A sunflower evaporates one and a quarter pints of water a day, and a cabbage about the same quantity. A wheat plant exhales, in one hundred and seventy-five days, about one hundred thousand grains of water.

Servile People.

Some men are afraid of making enemies, and this is well. But when this fear amounts to servility, it is not well. As a general rule, the man who has no enemies is a more dangerous man in the great life of created intelligence. He is a milk-and-water man, who contents himself with doing no harm, while it is notorious that he is doing no good. Such men are time-serving, fence-sitting go-betweeners, who creep after men of position and property, and hypocritically bow to men in humble walks of life. It is better far to do some harm occasionally, than never to do any good.

The Way to Success.

Patience, success, or position, are never gained by hasty, determinately, heavily striving, growing, living through. In short, you must carry a thing through. If you want to be anything, or anything, no matter if it does cost you the pleasure, the society, and the thousand dearly loved gratifications of life. No matter for these. Stick to the thing and carry it through. Believe that you are made for the matter, and that no one else can do it. Put forth your whole energies. Be awake, electrify yourself, and go forth to the task. Only one way to carry through a thing in all its completeness and proportion, and you will become a hero. You will think better of yourself; others will think better of you.
