Florida, correspondent says: "Some weeks ago a man named Jim McDonnell was murdered at McIwen's Ferry, on the Suwanee River, by a notorious outlaw and desperado known as Ed. Lawson. Hearing of the mur-der of his brother William, he started out as an avenger. Accompanied by a man named Peter Hagans, and a ferocious dog, he made his way to McIwen's Ferry, near which the outlaw Lawson lived, and after some little reconnoitering came upon the object of his search near the river. Lawson divining doubtless the object of the men, endeavored to escape to a neighboring hummock. But McDonnell had provided against such a contingency, and the dog was slipped from his leash and set upon his human prey. There was a short, hopeless race-a desperate struggle-and the murderer Lawson was at the mercy of the murderer McDonnell. The fierce dog had set his fangs in the man's shoulder, and held him firmly to the earth until the pursuers came up. There was but a slight display of etiquette when the two murderers met. McDonnell told Lawson that he had come to avenge the death of his brother, and allowed his prisoner fifteen minutes THE BALANCE OF TRADE.—Some of our to prepare for his doom.
