Smiles at the Door. Welcome home, dearest,

Poetry.

So early to-night; See baby's waiting To kiss you good-night'' I can scarce hold him, He's getting so wild, But really I think He's a beautiful child. He called for "dear dada,"

Quite plainly to-day, And now he is longing For good hearty play; Look at him now— All a quiver with joy; There, take and toss him Our beautiful boy. "Up to the ceiling, And down to the ground,"

Baby's glad chorus Keeps time to the sound; Little blue eyes Brimming over with fun, Till sleep draws the curtains And shuts out the sun. Sleep! little darling, Night darkens the earth, But morn shall rewaken Thy innocent mirth:

The little hands clinging-And little lips trying In kisses to meet Often, when father Grows tired in the day, Will shine a bright vision Of baby at play!
Of wife's happy features,
Her day's labor o'er,

When she and her darling Keep watch at the door. Ah, would more women A welcome prepare, For husband returning From labor and care Supper inviting— The dwelling all neat; And loving smiles ready His coming to greet

Then would less sorrow Our dwelling enshroud; Far fewer households Be under a cloud. Labor is wearing And when it is o'er See that your husband Gets smiles at the door.
