Woman and Wine. BY MARY KYLE DALLAS.

Pop! went the gay cork flying, Sparkled the gay champagne, By the light of a day that was dying, He filled up their goblets again. Let the last best toast be woman, "Woman, dear woman," said he

But she caught his strong brown fingers, And held them tight as in fear, And through the gathering twilight Her fond voice fell on his ear.

Rather by far than in wine. By the woes of the drunkard's mother, By his children who beg for bread, By the fate of her whose beloved one Looks on the wine when 'tis red,

What has wine brought to woman Nothing but tears and pain. It has torn from her heart her lover And proven her prayers in vain; And her household goods, all scattered

The wisdom of the maxim which we Lie tangled up in the vine, Oh! I prithee pledge no woman In the curse of so many—WINE. Select Tale.

When I got to Squires he pitched backward, and I caught him as he came down—had every appearance of a dead man-he never got up afterward nor did I hear or see any sign of life; last words he spoke were put down that stone, when he was standing with his hand on Mc-Cann's shoulder: I dragged him a little toward the edge of the road-supposed then he had been stabbed. McCann seemed to stand a while, then jumped at me and said I'll leave both of you d-d sons of bitches a corpse on the road; I ran from him to get away; went round horse's head; McCann jumped up into my waggon, I supposed to get across to me, I took horse by head, chirruped to her, she started suddenly, and he fell out. I jumped in and started up a little way to be ready to get away. I heard Mc-Cann say, when in the waggon, God damn you, I'll learn you to take off your coat to me, I'll show you Woodstock style. I told McMullin to drive on his team and get that man away; some of the party drove the team on—we were both heading up—I was turning to drive back to Squire, I was then about fifty feet away; he was lying just as I had left him; could see no sign of life; hallowed to McMullin to come back and help me, thought Squires was dead. Mc-Mullin and Lovely came back as soon as could, helped me put body in waggon; drove down to John Lovely's—a short distance—
