Poetry.
Sold Alone.
We had lingered out the season,
Far into the cooler days,
And the votaries of fashion All have flown their different ways.
Ours had no light flirtation, Such as watering-places know, But an earnest love-connection, Laying every barrier low.
I had felt my pulses beating At the warm touch of her hand; I had followed in her footsteps—Dreamed I was in fairy land.
She had hung upon my accents, With the lovely violet eyes, Glistening at the words I whispered, Beaming with a glad surprise.
We had wandered down the sea-beach With the moonlight or 'er whispering, Listening to the night wind's straying, Wondered what the winds were saying!
And again we stood together Near the ocean's soft sighing, While the waves were rolling glowing.
On the beaches were softly glowing.
"Dearest," said she, hesitating,
"Ah! too long we both have tarried, To-morrow we must part forever—For my darling, I am married!"
"Married!" I exclaimed, starting;
"Married!" murmured she with a sigh:
"This is indeed a parting, For my darling—so am I!"

Select Tale.
The Blessings of a Good Deed.
BY T. S. ARTHUR.
"I should like to do that every day for a year to come," said Mr. Wm. Everett, rubbing his hands quickly in irrepressible pleasure.
Mr. Everett was a stock and money broker, and had just made an "Operation," by which a clear gain of two thousand dollars was secured. He was alone in his office; or so much alone as not to feel restrained by the presence of another. And yet, a pair of dark eyes were fixed intently upon his self-satisfied countenance, with an expression, had he observed, that would, at least, have excited a moment's wonder. The owner of this pair of eyes was a slender, rather poorly dressed lad, in his thirtieth year, whom Mr.
Everett had engaged, a short time previously, to attend his office and run upon errands.
He was the son of a widowed mother, now in greatly reduced circumstances. His father had been an early friend of Mr. Everett's. It was this fact which led to the boy's introduction into the broker's office.
"Two thousand dollars!" The broker had uttered his satisfaction; but now he commenced with himself silently. "Two thousand dollars! A nice little sum that for a single day's work. I wonder what Mr. Jenkins will say to-morrow morning, when he hears of such an advance in those securities!" From some cause, this mental reflection that Mr. Jenkins did not increase our friend's state of exaltation. Most probably, there was something in the transaction, by which he had gained so handsome a sum of money, that in calmer moments, would not bear a too close scrutiny—something that Mr. Everett would hardly like to have blazoned forth to the world. Be this as it may, a more sober mood, in time, succeeded, and although the broker was richer by two thousand dollars than when he arose in the morning, he was not so happy as he had been.
An hour afterwards, a business friend came into the office of Mr. Everett and said:
"Have you heard about Cullen?"
"No; what of him?"
"He's said to be off for California, with twenty thousand dollars in his pockets more than justly belong to him."
"What?"
"Too true, I believe. His name is in the list of passengers who left New York in the steamer yesterday."
"The steamer?" exclaimed Mr. Everett, who, by this time, was very considerably excited.
"He owes you, does he?" said the friend, "I lent him three hundred dollars only day before yesterday."
"A clear windfall!"
"Yes, it is. Oh, if I could only get my hands on him!"
Mr. Everett's countenance, as he said this, did not wear a very amiable expression.
"Don't get excited about it," said the other. "I think he has let you off quite reasonably. Was that sum all he asked to borrow of you?"
"Yes."
"I know too, at least, who are poorer by a couple of thousands by his absence." But Mr. Everett was excited. For half an hour after the individual left, who had communicated this unpleasant piece of news, the broker walked the floor of his office with compressed lips, a lowering brow, and most unhappy feelings. The two thousand dollars gain in no way balanced in his mind the three hundred lost. The pleasure created by the one had not penetrated deep enough to escape obliteration by the other.
Of all this the boy with the dark eyes had taken quick cognizance. And he com-prehended it all. Scarcely a moment had his glance been removed from the countenance or form of Mr. Everett, while the latter walked, with uneasy steps, the floor of his office.
As the afternoon waned the broker's mind grew calmer. The first excitement, produced by the loss, passed away; but it left a sense of depression and disappointment that completely shadowed his feelings.
Intent as he had been the lad's observation of his employer during all this time, it is a little remarkable that Mr. Everett had not once been conscious of the fact that the boy's eyes were steadily upon him. In fact, he had been, as was usually the case, too much absorbed in things concerning himself, to notice what was peculiar to another, unless the peculiarity were one readily used to his own advantage.
"John," said Mr. Everett, turning suddenly to the boy, and encountering his large, earnest eyes, "take this note to Mr. Legrand."

truer sense than that of heaping trinkets on their necks. Train them for independence first, and then labor to give it to them. Let them, as soon as they are grown up, have some little money, or means of making money, to be their own, and teach them how to deal with it, without needing every moment somebody to help them. Help them to help themselves. Fit them to be able to add to their own means, rather than to be forever plunging and economizing till their minds are narrowed and their hearts are sick. Give all the culture you can to every power they possess. If they should marry they will be the happier and the better for it. If they should remain among the millions of the unmarried, they will bless you in your grave, and say of you what cannot be said of many a doting parent, by his surviving child: "My father cared that I should be happy after his death, as well as while I was his pet and his joy."

Good Farming.
Here is the secret of good farming. You can take from the land more than you restore to it, in some shape or other, without ruining it, and so destroy your capital. Different soils may require different modes of treatment and cropping, but in every variety of soil these are the golden rules to be attended to: Drain until you find that the water from heaven does not stagnate in the soil, but runs through it and off it freely. Turn up and tilt the land until the soil sinks into loose powdery loam, that the sun and air readily pass through. Let no weed occupy the place where a useful plant could possibly grow.
Collect every particle of manure that you can, whether liquid or solid. Let nothing on the farm go to waste. Put in your crops in that course which experience has shown to lead to success in their growth, and an enrichment and improvement of the land.
Give every plant room to spread its roots in the soil and its leaves in the air. And in all your operations endeavor to be a little ahead of your neighbors.

Riches.
The man with good, firm health is rich. So is the man with a clear conscience. So is the parent of good, happy children. So is the merchman whose coat little children of the parish pluck, as he passes them at their play.
So is the wife who has the whole heart of a good husband. So is the maiden whose horizon is not bounded by the "coming man," but who has a purpose in life, whether she ever meet him or not. So is the young man, who laying his hand on his heart, can say, "I have treated every woman I ever saw as I should with my sister treated for other men."
"John," he said, "if your mother is in trouble, it may be in my power to relieve her."
"Oh, sir!" exclaimed the lad, eagerly, coming up to Mr. Everett, and in the forgetfulness of the moment, laying his small hand upon that of his employer, "if you will, you can."

Sorrow.
Sorrow breeds and makes the mind gloom.
And in sorrow we love and trust our friends more tenderly, and the dead become dearer to us. And just as the stars shine out in the night, so there are blessed faces that look at us in our grief, though before their features were fading from our recollection. Suffering!
Let no man dread it too much, because it is better for him, and it will help to make him immortal. It is not in the bright happy days, but only in the solemn night, that the world is to be seen shining in the long distance. And it is in sorrow—the night of the soul—that we see the farthest, and know ourselves natives of infinity, and sons and daughters of the Most High.

The Way to Avoid Calumny.
"If any one speaks ill of thee," said Egip-tius, "consider whether he hath truth on his side; and if so, reform thyself, that his conscience may not afflict thee." When Andromachus was told the very boys laughed at his singing, "Ay," said he, "then I must learn to sing better." Plato being told that he had many enemies who spoke ill of him, said, "It is no matter; I will live so that none shall believe them." Hearing, at another time, that an intimate friend of his had spoken detractively of him, he said: "I am sure he would not do it if he had not some reason for it." This is the surest, as well as the noblest way of driving the sting out of calumny, and the true method of preparing a man for that great and only relief against the pains of calumny—a good conscience.

How to Succeed.
If you expect it too hard to sit upon, stand up. If a rock rises up before you, roll it away, or climb over it. If you wish for confidence, prove yourself worthy of it. It takes longer to skin an elephant than a mouse, but the skin is worth something.
Don't be content with doing what others have done—surpass it. Deserve success and it will come. The boy was not a born man. The sun does not rise like a rocket, or down like a bullet from a gun; slowly but surely it takes its round, and never tires.
It is as easy to be a leader as a wheel horse.
If the task be hard, the pay will be greater; if the task be hard, the more competent you must be to do it.

Never fail to do that good which lies next to your hand. True God to weave your little threads into the great web of life, though the pattern shows it not yet. The grand harvest of the ages shall come to its reaping, and the day shall broaden itself into a thousand years, and the thousand years, shall show themselves as a perfect and finished day.

Without modesty, beauty is ungraceful learning unattractive.

Items Foreign & Local.
In France there is only one death to two thousand births. In this country there is one for every 418 persons.
The peach crop of Delaware and Maryland will, it is estimated, reach this year upward of 1,800,000 bushels, an increase of 400,000 bushels over the crop last year.
Halifax harbor is to be further fortified by the sinking of torpedoes in suitable places.
A detachment of the Royal Torpedo Corps has arrived and will commence work shortly.
Two women conspired in Philadelphia have established a Drunkard's Home, which at ready has eleven inmates, nine men and two women, saved by the praying hand. These are most tenderly and thoroughly cared for.
An eccentric and rich Englishman has bequeathed £50 to the London Gas Company on condition that they burn his body in one of their retorts. He ought to make good gas.
