BY DAVID G. ADEE. " Verbum Sap."

The trusty sword of Bunker Hill, Believe me, Brother Smith, is sheathed; And the' the brow of Washington With laurels fresh is wreathed Yet holds his hand the olive branch Towards England just across the wave, And Yankee love and Yankee faith Spring blooming from that patriot grave.

Hate England !* Brother Smith, you dote
Or quaff too deep of double stout—
The stripling more dislikes his sire
And daughters at their mother's pout, Then chaste Columbia distrusts Stately Britannia, sister dear, They've had their little tiffs and huffs But now thank God, the sky is clear.

Hate England! Why, mistaken Smith We learn to spell from English books, And claim a share in Robin Hood And Crusoe's cruise and Captain Cook's; And when we tall and manly grow, By Byron swear and sly Tom Moore, With Wellington and Waterloo,

For shame, Sir Smith! We love you all, From good Queen Vic. to Honest Arch; Young Boz is ours, our Crayon yours; And pardon me if so my mind He is the Thunder, you Small-Beer.

We love old England, Goldwin Smith, Her common law, her velvet lawns; But not her oysters, I confess; And some object to smoky dawns. Tho' most we love her friendly tone Her stalwart men and women fair, And if you fail to like my verse, Why then, O Smith, go read Lothair.

No. Smith, there is no hate at all; But mutual interest, kindness, too And any spectre you may raise Will prove a baby bugaboo. For know, there is a tie so dear, That aught besides seem simple sinning Which not elastic is, my friend, In Anglo-Saxon called God winning.
