A fresh attempt is being made in New York to secure the pardon of Frank Walworth, who murdered his father in that city a few years ago, and was sentenced to the Penitentiary for the crime: It is alleged that the young man is growing insane over his confinement, and many extenuating circumstances are presented which, it is claimed, call for executive interference in his case. It will be remembered that the elder Walworth, who was a writer of some note, and who was separated from his family, was in the habit of writing the latter threatening letters, which were calculated to keep them in constant alarm. It was a favorite practice of that gentleman to open a vein in his arm, dip his pen in the blood, and write these direful missives, after which he would wrap them around bullets and send them to his wife. They breathed wholesale slaughter, but were regarded by many as empty threats, and the fruit of a brain diseased and hardly accountable. The son finally sought his fa-
