Slow moves, it seems, the battle march We see not yet the triumph arch; The workers still are weepers, Not yet the shout of reapers Rings o'er the harvest golden The gloomy lands and olden With burdens still and weary, And human paths are dreary;
But yet the leader of the van,
With royal plan,
Directs the seige for earth and man.

Office-Over Col. W. T. Baird's Drug Store, 23 Corner Main and King Streets. What if the centuries go by, And kingdoms rise and nations die? What if the victory tarries, Architect and Builder, And Satan's ensign carries The banner of his legions Across the fairest regions? What if he mark the ages By dark and bloody stages? The Conqueror, moving on his track, Hath never lack Of power to turn his armies back.

> The outposts yield; time after time Our Leader smites the towers of crime Old bastions dread and hoary, Thrown down have told the story, How, struck with fear and pallor Before the victor's valor His foes have fled. He liveth, And, by the grace He giveth, His battle legions stronger grow He moveth slow.

But onward, like the river's flow. Still weep and toil, ye blessed ones; The King is building up His thrones Of justice for the nations : The march of generations Is toward the day Sabattic When songs of love ecstatic Shall rise o'er isle and ocean, And hush the world's commotion When peace, so blessed and so calm, With crown and palm, Shall heal the nations with its balm.

"He shall not fail," for he hath said That he shall reign, to victory led; And while the world is dreaming His battle flag is streaming; Above the midnight revel Behold the doom of evil-For, see, the shadow lingers Where writes the awful fingers He cometh in—the King at night— And law and right Shall fill the world with love and light.

"I have no power to keep him here," Alice Heath answered bitterly. There were steps in the hall, and man's face looked in at the open door. "I am going now," he said simply .-"I have come to say good-bye, Alice." She turned away from the window, cold and calm and proud, and held out her hand,

"Good-bye, and I hope you will be "Happy!" He repeated the word with a world of bitterness in his tone.-'I never expect to be happy again." He held her hand a moment with grief and pain working in his face. He searched the woman's face closely to see if there was the least sign of her relent-

CANADA AND THE CENTENNIAL.—The Philadelphia Bulletin says:—"There will be, in all probability, a very fine representation at the Centennial Exhibition of the products and inventions of the Dominion of Canada. There are no signs of any feeling, on the part of the people as British subjects, that it will not be becoming to take part in a celebration designed to commemorate the severance of the Union from British rule. With many disadvantages arising from geographical po-sition, and others from having a population of opposite races and religions, Canada has yet made prodigious strides in wealth and industry of late years, and especially since the creation of the confederate form of Government. Her contiguity to the United States has stimulated competition in manufactures, commerce and all other forms of industry. Her internal improvements have been extended on a magnificent scale, largely with the aid of London capital, which is lent generously to a people so loyal to the crown. There have, it is true, been frauds and scandals in the progress of some of these, and yet none quite equal to those known in our own country and in some others. But the works have been made, and every year gives new proof of the wisdom and enterprise that projected them and carried them on to their present condition. Montreal, Toronto and some other Canadian cities have been made to grow, under the stimulus of the trade thus brought to them, with a rapidity worthy of comparison with that shown in some of our own young cities. In the rural, agricultural part of the Dominion there has been almost equally rapid progress. There is, therefore, every reason for hoping that, under the arrangements adopted by the Government at Ottawa, the Canadian department in the coming exhibition will be very well filled population and less wealth than the State of New York, she is almost sure to make a much finer show, for neither the Government nor the people of New York have as by Canada in the exhibition by extending to the Canadians the most generous and cordial
