AN OLD MAID'S OPINION .- If dosen't make me laugh, and I can't help it, to hear married people pity old maid's FOUNDRY AND OFFICE — In rear of Bapti. Meeting House, near Hayden's Mill. never thinking for one moment how an old maid might pity the married.

Oh, no! Poor soul she hasn't any husband! Poor dear, she hasn't anv children! It's so very, very sad. Of course it is, poetically speaking, but don't you ever pity a woman for not marrying until you are quite sure what sort of a man she hasn't married. I've known a broken engagement or wo that really were subjects of congratu-There isn't any other time when a woman feels so like feeling of her shoulder blades, to see whether the wings have sprouted, as when she has slipped the wrong man's ring off her finger, and feels that she'll never bear the brunt of his hateful temper, or put up with his neglect, or grow old before her time because of his unfaithfulness, when she stands free again and ready for the right man to

I suppose a woman never feels quite certain that the right man won't come

However, we're talkin of old maids and he people who pity them. It is all very well to get poetical over married life and set single women down as miserable creatures, but like most theories, the "thing won't wash." If you get an adoring husband, ready to cherish and protect you while life lasts, you're certainly a happy woman but how many do? One out of fifty, It's a lottery with few lucky numbers and even an old maid dosen't bitterly envy a woman with a mean or a quarelsome or neglectful husband-a woman who is left alone with all her cares, a woman who is a slave, not a wife-nor best loved wife on earth.

even always all that falls to the lot of the There is peace and rest in life when one is one's own mistress, at all events; when I hear worn out, worried matrons pitying single women I often feel like laughing, it is so funny.
