Poetry.
Two Christians.
Two Christians travelled down a road,
Who viewed the world with different eyes.
The one was pleased with earth's abode,
The other longing for the skies.

For one, the heavens were no blue,
The other's eyes were fixed on things above;
The other's eyes were fixed on things above,
Only for that which lies beyond.

For one, the world was all that he
The other's eyes were fixed on things above;
The other's eyes were fixed on things above,
Only for that which lies beyond.

Now that particular suit of clothes was just the nearest one I ever owned, arm holes, collars, waistbands, buttons all just the thing, and my blood boiled to hear them talk so coolly of using them for stripes in a rag carpet. They kept on talking as they swept, dusted and cleaned up the room.

"Bob says he will take the Martin farm to work this year," said Jerusha, cheerfully, "and as soon as we are arrived we shall go to housekeeping in that little cottage close to the road. Now I must get my carpet done as soon as possible, for I want it in the nice little room."

"His folks live so far away they will never come to see us," said Jerusha, it wasn't for the looks of it, but it was old mother Smith about coloring yellow; she's sure to be here to-day."

I was getting very mad now, indeed, I felt the crisis was near, and that I should either die or explode if they did not let my snuff-colored suit alone.

Jerusha picked them up. I knew it, for I heard the buttons and buckles, jingleand made for the door. I tried to shake my fist and yell at her, but in vain.

I lay there, outwardly as quiet as a lamb inwardly boiling with wrath. It was too much for me. I could not stand it any longer. I rose and went to the door.

"Jerusha dropped my clothes, and her mother the duster, and both fell from the room and house, never stopping until they reached Dr. Brown's across the street. With difficulty I managed to get my clothes. I had just got them fairly on, when Mrs. Jones and her daughter, followed by an immense company of men, women and children came peering cautiously into the room. Such a sacred looking crowd was enough to amuse me, so I laughed. I knew I shouldn't have been so foolish as to let them see me in my nightgown. I had colored it if they had looked into my clothes, which the undertaker was just carrying past the window—and buried me the next minute. I laughed until I hoarse, and down I went with a crash.

"The undertaker entered into the room, saying, 'You are not dead yet, Ben?'"
"Well, no, not exactly," I replied, "sorry to disappoint my friends about the funeral, however."

"Yes," he said, rather absently, "had rather than that," and he went out.
Fooling out of that snuff-colored strip, I thought, as I looked at Jerusha.

"Go and speak with him, said her father, in a stage whisper. He's got the stamps, and you had better marry him after."

"The began to gather around me and congratulate me on my escape. I noticed that they cried a great deal more now than when I was dead. Jerusha came and hung around my neck, sniveling desperately. I gave her a not over gentle push and told her to wait next time until I was safely buried before she set her eyes on me."

"Oh, I am so glad," she said sweetly, without appearing to notice what I said about the clothes—"that you are not dead, Benny, dear. My heart seemed all withered and broken to see you lying all cold and white. I wept bitterly over your body and face, my beloved."

"Yes," I replied, "I heard you and Bob talking so terribly. It was a lucky die for me."

"Could you hear?" she gasped.
"I rather think I could—some," I replied.

She looked toward the door, but it was crowded full, so she made a dive for the open window, and went through it like a deer. She shut herself up in a smokehouse, and would not come out until I left the house.

Bob would not fulfil his promise of marriage with me, because she tried to make up with me again; so she is living a life of sinfulness.

While I am writing, my wife is cutting up my snuff-colored clothes to make a stripe in a new carpet for our front room.—Sam Spangland Banner.

THE EASTERN WAY.—Don't live a single hour of your life without doing exactly what is to be done in it, and going straight through it from beginning to end. Work, play, study, whatever it is—take hold at once, and finish it up squarely and clearly, and then attend to the next thing, without letting any moments drop out between. It is wonderful to see how many hours prompt people contribute to make of a day; it is as if they picked up the moments that the dawdlers lost. And if ever you found yourself doing any thing that you have to do, you will find that you have many things pressing upon you that you hardly know how to begin, take hold of the very first one that comes to hand, and you will find the rest all fall into line and follow after like a company of well-drilled soldiers, and though work may be hard to meet when it changes in a squad, it is easily vanquished if you can get it into line. You may have often seen the anecdote of the man who was asked how he accomplished so much in his life. "My father taught me," was his reply, "when I had anything to do, go and do it." There is the secret—the magic word—"now."

The average novel is working a fatal mischief in the average mind, in pictures of its love. It makes that tender glow and glamour which related nature feels when they meet true love. It is no such thing; it is true passion, that is all—a blissed power, purely and rightly used, but no more true love, than those little books and tendrilous you see in June on a shooting are the ripe clusters of October. True love grows out of reverence and deference, loyalty and courtesy, dark days and bright, sorrow and joy.
It is the pure essence of all we are and all we do, of all that is most beautiful and good in our hearts and lives.—Robert Collyer.

Do not be content with doing what another has done; surpass it.

Truth is the shortest and nearest way to our end, carrying us thither in a straight line.

A clock on the stairs is dangerous when it runs down.

What is Preaching.—There are two ways of reading a sermon—either as a human composition, or a divine message.
If we look upon it entirely as the first, and require our clergyman to finish it with the utmost care and learning for our better delight, whether of ear or intellect, we shall be necessarily led to expect much formality and staidness in its delivery, and think that all is not well if the pulpit have not a golden fringe around it, and a goodly cushion in front of it; but we shall at the same time consider the treasure thus prepared as something to which it is our duty to listen without restlessness for half an hour or three-quarters, but which, when duty has been devoutly performed, we may dismiss from our minds in happy confidence of being provided with another when next it shall be necessary. But if once we begin to regard the preacher, whatever his faults, as a man sent with a message to us, as we are, in a matter of life or death whether we hear or refuse, if we look upon him as set in charge over many spirits in danger of ruin, and having allowed to him but an hour or two in the seven days to speak to them; if we make some endeavors to conceive how precious those hours ought to be to him, as a small advantage on the side of God, after his flock have been exposed for six days together to the world's temptations, and he has been forced to watch the thorn and the thistle springing up in their hearts, and to see what ghosts had scattered their souls, and what the wayside in this wild bird and the other; and at last, when breathless and weary with the week's labor, they give him this interval of imperfect and languid hearing, he was but thirty minutes to get at the separate hearts of a thousand men to convince them of their weakness, shame them for all their sins, warn them of their dangers, to try by this way and that to stir the Master himself has stood and knocked, yet none opened, thirty minutes to raise the dead interest, and to lead them to the Father.

Let us but once understand and feel this, and we shall look with changed eyes upon that frippery of gay furniture about the place from which the message of judgment must be delivered, which either breathes upon the dry bones that they may live, or, if ineffectual, remains as a monument of the unbelief of the multitude. The London News has a remarkable due to the fact that a business chemist is very anxious as to the success of the experiment, and they proceed to the details of the matter. The valuable properties by the gradual extraction of the water contained by them in the original state.

Sold your beds in the hottest season you can apply, if there are traces of buggy kerosene with a small paint brush. It is a sure cure. Tenants of city houses are often annoyed by bugs, and tell where they came from. Perhaps the border of the wall-paper might divulge their source, or the corners of the windows disclose their haunts. Apply kerosene carefully, and they will disappear.

The discovery of the alleged murderer of Mr. Keys, of Stewartsville, N. J., is a startling vindication of the old proverb.
The crime was committed nine years ago, and the accused had been in prison for the element of pluck. The tendency with all unfortunates is to magnify difficulties, and underrate, or forget all their power to overcome them. A man in good health, with unusual character, need fear no evil, nor be robbed of his happiness, no matter how adversely things may appear. If he is heavily in debt, and can satisfy the community that he is straining every nerve and appropriating all his resources to discharge his obligations, there is no danger of his losing a well-earned reputation, and there is no reason why he should not cheerfully accept the element of pluck. The tendency
