I take my wiews on this important subject of punishment by death. In the first place, we will settle on the fact that it is wrong to take the life of our fellow man. Why? because the law of God forbids it; natural laws forbid it : and human laws should do the same .-Then, if it be so that all laws forbid the taking of life, and that no individual has that right, what authority has any company of panied by the money to ensure insertion. men to place the rope around the neek of their fellow and launch his spirit (into heaven or hell) before his God, prepared or unprepared. Taking the New Testament scriptures for our guide, we find nothing in all Unrist's tea hings gives any authority for The Mosaic Law differed in this; the Jews punished in this way for smaller offences, but under the mild doctrines of the new dispensation we are taught, invariably, that we have no right to kill the body, and send the soul into the presence of its maker. This should be the creator's work alone. God giveth life; can man take it away, without
