Poetry.

Over my soul the great thoughts roll, Like the waves of a mighty sea; But clear, through the rushing and snrging there sounds A wonderful music to me. So sweet, so low, the harmonies flow; they go Wonderful, beautiful, soft and slow.

Nor born of the silver sea :-Immortal-beyond all the music of man-It is love that is singing in me. So sweet, so low, the harmonies flow; They rise and they fall, they come and they go; Wonderful, beautiful, soft and slow.

Not here, not there, not in this calm air,

Not mine alone this melting tone— The soul of it comes from thee— For thou, in thy bosom, art singing of love, And the music flows over to me. So sweet, so low, the harmonies flow; They rise and they fall, they come and they go; Wonderful, beautiful, soft and slow.

"There, I am not surprised at this action on the part of Redmond Clarke," said Louise. "He will not come back here to-night; I say, as I have said before, he is a coward."

"Why, Louise, this move of his has mothing to do with the superstitious tale we have just heard."

"I believe it has." The secret desire out of the room was full of think and believe high and lofty things.

Redmond had a large reserve power in his organization; but his real strength, physically, was far more enormous. The need for the exercise of his tremendous will being over, he tottered and fell insensible a few yards from the spot where the two girls lay on some bedding that had been thrown out of the burning house.

Kind neighbors were making preparations for the removal and accommodation of the sufferers. Louise under the reviving influence of the night air, gasped once or twice, and then slowly unclosed her eyes. She looked around on the burning building and the disordered scene with a strange, unreal sensation.

She rose slowly to a sitting position, and saw Redmond lying still as death on the state and saw Redmond lying still as death on the same disadvantage of the conscious form.
