shows the pressure of dull times there can be no doubt that times are very dull throughout England. It is not that any great calamity is weighing on the country, but a number of small adverse causes have produced a large unfavorable result. We are not in the midst of a commercial crisis, and if trade is more limited, it is sounder than it used to be. People are not so much ruined as hit, and the number of people who have been hit in various ways is enormous.

Large losses have been sustained by the Large losses have been sustained by the holders of foreign bonds, and many who have been accustomed to live merrily on precarious incomes have found their res urces suddenly at an end. But this is an element in the general aggregate of impecuniosity, the importance of which may be easily exaggerated. London is not much affected by the miseries of Turkish and Peruvian bondholders, and it is not until the home trade nd home revenues are effected that economy becomes transparent. It is because steady people are suffering that London shows signs of distress.—Saturday Review.

Business Depression in England.—

The times are dull rather than hard, but they are very dull. Years have passed since there was so bad a season, and it might have been expected that a season marked by the return of the Prince of Wales would have been one of more than usual brilliancy. A despatch from the Russian telegraph agency says: "If complications arise between Turkey and Servia they must be considered as a result of the material and every obvious support extended to Turkey by England. In every direction there was signs that the world is economizing, and has less money than it used to have for luxury and recreation. Pictures do not fetch their old prices, houses will not let, the supply of horses exceeds the demand, and servants cannot get places equal to the height of their ambition. London is less gay because London is less rich, and that London should be so far less rich as to have begun to make its economies evidently means much in the current history of the country. The wealth of the provinces is poured into London, and when London shows the pressure of dull times there can both the sum of action is clear. We should gladly reconcile the ports and turks are gathering at the Dwina, the crossing of which by the former will bring on battle. In the House of Lords, Earl Derby, in replying to a motion for the production of papers relative to the Eastern question, stated that the abandonment of the Berlin memorandum had removed the cause of disunion between England and the other powers. He justified the revolvition in Constantinople, and deprecated hasty, unfavorable criticism of foreign powers. The situation, he said, was very complicated, but, for his part, he saw no reason to doubt that all the Great Powers, without exception, would be glad to terminate a quarrel having so many elements of danger.
