Czar's proclamation a revolutionary manifesto, indicating a determination to annex MOULDINGS festo, indicating a determination to annex Bulgaria. They add this to the reputed intention of Russia to claim Armenia and the Turkish iron-clad fleet as indemnity and enforce the free passage of the Dardanelles, and declare such changes would rob England of every real rampart for her Eastern Empire. The Economist, a Radical paper, calls attention to the probability that if the Dardanelles is to be kept closed against the Russians by force England must do it alone, because the other Powers are not sufficiently interested in that result to justify the antici-

which would never have been accepted if there had been free and timely communication between the Government and the House of Commons. The Saturday Review sums up the political situation, so far as concerns European Turkey, thus:—"At the end of a costly campaign, though perhaps it might have been victorious, Russia will depend on the permission of Austria to effect a permanent conquest in Turkey." The semi-official Montags Revue of Vienna, after endorsing Minister Tisza's statements, thus writes:— The development of events affords almost a sure guarantee that the war will remain lolealized. The more important task will begin after peace is concluded. If Russia adheres to the unselfish views which she has repeatedly solemnly proclaimed and seems disposed solely to ameliorate the condition of the Christians, that would constitute a comparatively satisfactory solution, but Count Andrassy cannot possibly conceal from himself that the decision of a war involves consequences which often upset the most sincere ses. There are ideas which will grow with the success of the Russian arms, the realization of which Austro-Hungary must endeavor to prevent with all the means in her power. Austrian diplomacy will not aid in introducing any essential changes in the hitherto existing arrangements of political power beyond improvement in the condition of Christians in Turkey. Austria's existence is such a strong necessity that we may confidentially rely upon our powerful allies, who are compelled to promote the interests of Austria while furthering their own. If matters should come to a crisis, and we should be compelled to appeal to our own valiant army, we shall defend our interests
