Poetry.

Farm and Home.

The Poet in the City.

BY C. C. FRALER TYTLER.

The Poet stood in the sombre town

His heart was sad, for afar he heard The sound of the Spring's light tread.

He thought he saw in the pearly East

The happy housewife beneath the thatch.

The pale March sun arise,

With hand above h reves,

So near the quiet skies.

And spake to his heart, and said,-

"O weary prison devised by man!

Bluebells mimicking summer skies, And the song of the thrush outpowered-The changeless days were so sad to him, That the Poet's heart beat strong. And he struggled as some poor caged lar And he cried, "How long, how long? I have missed a Spring I can never see, And the singing of birds is gone!"

But even the time of the roses came, And the nightingale hushed her lay, The Poet, still in the dusty town, Went quietly on his way— A poorer poet by just one Spring,

And a richer man by one suffering. Select Tale.

> A writer in the Pall Mall Gazette says that those who have given that chronological tables yield many singular coincidences. Thus, 244 years measured the duration of dynasties of the Kings of Rome, the Seleucid monarchs, the Merovingian Kings of France, and the Lombard Kings of Italy. In like manner 424 years was the duration of Solomon's Temple and of the Roman empire, from the battle of Actium to the death of Theodocius the Great. It reaches also from the famous era

THE FARMER.-When a farmer can so manage his farm as to " make both ends of the year meet," even if it be with the most rigid economy, he should be contented with his lot. If we take a survey of the business men of our villages and cities, we find that snly three or four in a hundred realize a competence for old age. Then imagine the unhappiness of those who sooner or later fail to support themselves and families respectably-the cares and anxieties that constantly produce pangs and torture that no farmer ever felt. These men may apparently lead pleasant lives, as the outside world cannot witness the emotions of a man who deily strains every financial nerve to meet his notes falling due at the bank. The time between one and three o'clock every day in the city of New York, brings more anxiety to business men than all the farmers of the United tates realize in a lifetime. BLINDERS ON HORSES.—An English journal disposes of the practice of using blinders on horses in the following trenchant terms:

—"We never could see what vice or deformity lay in a horse's eye that shou'd make it necessary to cover it up and shut out its owner from at least two-thirds of his rightful field of vision.
