Mir. Porter hoped that if they gave the Secretary $300, that officer would get his alumanace right the present year, and not call the Council together on a wrong day.

Mr. Day said he was a new member, yet it would be expected that on a question of so much importance, he should have something to say. His people expected him fearlessly to discharge his duty. As regarded the way the business of the County had been conducted for the past two years, if there was a Parish that might with justice cry out for retrenchment, it was his own Parish, Drum mond. If a man worked and did his duty well, he believed in paying him generously, and thus there would be an inducement for him to be faithful in the discharge of his official obligations. It, however, appeared to him premature to re-appoint an officer before ascentaining whether or no he had performed his work. No doubt the Secretary's accounts were correct, but they should have been audited before his re-appointment. He would like to see that officer get salary enough; all the Parish officers accounts were correct, but they should have been audited before his re-appointment. Mr. Curless thought that as the County had got the benefit of the fines, it ought to be a great deal of assistance to the Parish officers; had a great deal of work to do, and endure a great amount of abuse. Mr. Armstrong had no disposition to find of Mr. Porter, seconded by Mr. Armstrong, following report:

Mr. Armstrong had no disposition to find fault. He was on the committee to examine the Secretary-Treasurer's books last year, and could endorse the Warden's statement, that the accounts were kept in good shape, and correct. But still he believed the salary was too high. There were men in the County perfectly responsible and capable, who would do the work for $200. People could hardly be expected to pay $300, when they could have the work performed for $200. (Why not name your man? Mr. Porter.) He, Mr. A., had no wish to name him; had no desire to remove the present Secretary, he was simply unwilling to have him overpaid. Committee on Bridge, appointed at July a reduction in the Secretary-Treasurer's salary. That officer has now accepted office and salary with his eyes wide open, and it would be found that owing to his increased labors, and the necessity for his frequent travel between Grand Falls and Andover, his salary this year would not really be worth more to him than $250. It did appear that their contingent expenses were large on so the following accounts were ordered to be left in the hands of the new Auditor.
