The False and the True.

Down by a little pebbly brook, Whose waters laughing fancies took,
And for the last time went skipping, Two little children, boy and girl,
With sun-browned cheeks and tangled curls, Came tripping.

As, boy and girl like, on they passed Where giant clouds deep shadows cast, Hand clasped hand so tightly, Said he to her, "I love you!"
I love you all the world above!"

Full lightly.

And she, in her love for him,
Not seeing that his love was dim, But trusting him full surely,
Looked up with eyes of heaven's blue, While his lips whispered, "I love you!"
Denari.

The silent years had filled past,
And once again the morning passed, The brookside pathway taking;
And as of old the wavelets played,
And little circling eddies made, O'er smooth-run pebbles breaking.

As the maiden lingered still,
A picture of sweet womanhood, Pure, true, and tender-hearted, She heard the voice she loved so well To other ears its love-late told, The tale of days departed.

"O love!" it said—"O little love!
I love you all the world above!"
Sweet story olden never;
But the little maiden's dream had fled,
Her loving trust lay cold and dead, Forever and forever.

And though that sweet, pure-hearted one Might still find love beneath the sun That would desert her never,
For, while she passed without regret;
For, while she loved no more—True love loves on forever.

SOMETHING IN THE BED.—Judge Pitman has a habit of slipping his watch under his pillow when he goes to bed—The other night somehow it slipped down, and, as the judge was restless, it gradually worked its way downward toward the foot of the bed. After a bit, while he was lying awake, his foot touched it, and it felt very cold; he was surprised and scared, and jumping from the bed he said:

"By gracious, Maria! there's a toud or snake or something under the covers.
I touched it with my foot."

Mrs. Pitman gave a loud scream and was out on the floor in an instant.

"Now don't go to hollering and waking up the neighbors," said the judge.
"You go and get me a broom or something, and we'll fix the thing mighty quick."

Mrs. Pitman got the broom and gave it to the judge, with the remark that she felt as if snakes were creeping all up and down her legs and back.

"Oh, nonsense, Maria! Now you turn down the covers slowly, while I hold the broom and bang it. Put a bucket of water alongside the bed, too, so we can shove it in and draw it out."

Mrs. Pitman fixed the bucket and gently removed the covers. The judge held the broom uplifted, and as soon as the black ribbon of the watch was revealed, he cracked away three or four times with his broom. Then he pushed the thing off into the bucket. Then they took the bucket to the light to investigate the matter.

When the judge saw what it was, he said:

"I might've known that. Just like you women, to go screeching and fussing about nothing. Who's going to pay me for that watch? It's utterly ruined."

"It was you that made the fuss, not me," said Mrs. P. You needn't try to put the blame off on me."

"Oh, hush up, you do to bed. I'm tired of hearing you blather. Blame me if I ain't going to get a divorce and emigrate."

And the judge turned in and growled at Maria until he fell asleep.

PUTTING A BULL TO THE TEST.—They had a discussion over Mr. Miller's other day about bulls. Mr. Miller said it was all nonsense to talk about a bull being excited and made furious by a red rag.
He said he had seen an angry temper-ment bull over in the field, who would take like a lamb if you would shake the flags of all nations in his face. Dr. Robinson said that Miller didn't try it, and Miller said that Robinson that he would. So Miller went into the house and loaded himself up with a red flannel undershirt, and he walked out to the field. The bull was there, looking as calm as a summer morning.

Miller climbed the fence and went toward the animal, keeping the shirt behind him. As he came close to the animal he suddenly produced the shirt and dirted it in the bull's face. The beast jumped back a yard or two in astonishment, and kept his eye on Miller, while Miller waved the old vermilion garment vigorously. Then the bull shook his head several times as if he declined to have anything to do with the business; and Miller thought the descent he had made on the bull's face, and he made a thump to his nose, and made a sign of victory.

Just then an idea seemed to strike the bull. He put his head down and moved swiftly forward. Miller at first thought there had been an earthquake. He was hurled up twenty feet in the air, and he struck the ground he made another ascension. Upon this descent he thought he would try to run, but a Devon shorthorn was inserted into his trousers and again he went up high enough to take a bird's-eye view of the surrounding country. On the twenty-fifth descent he struck the ground he made another ascension. Upon this descent he thought
