Dr. Rattray asserts that hygienic science of modern days has not yet attained to the perfection it had in the time of Moses. "Had a physician of the last century planned a sanitary code like this, so simple yet ample, far-seeing and efficacious, he would have been immortalized and deemed a leader of men, a giant, intellect far in advance of his Moses dictated these masterly laws in a profession to which he did not belong,

One can not read of their ravages and those of diptheria, without wishing that the kind sternness of ancient times might be felt in the protection of society .-A not less important change would be to bring children up under such healthful conditions as regards food, air and sleep, that the germs of disease would not find in their bodies congenial breeding places. That healthful development will insure freedom from these diseases when they prevail at a been with some degree of surprise that the public heard that at Friday's sitting of the History of the St. John Fire, philes with the famous glass of beer which worked such wonders for the Heir Apparent in his illness, announced himself as being on the side of the alcholophobes. This is a terrible blow for the wine bibbers and beer drinkers of society. Sir William, indeed, contemptuously admitted that people like waggoners and coal heavers might take alcoholic liquors without being very much the worse for it, but he said it was ruinous to men who had to use their brains at all.—
