HOLY CHIVALRY.

Rushed where'er the lists were apread,

Crowned the living, mourned the dead.

Weep not for the vanished glory,

Burden of the minstrel's song,

When the Knights of ancient story

Battled against banded wrong;

Thankful if some Queen of Beauty

Chivalry's was cruel splendour; There are nobler conflicts now;

Still the trampled nature calleth
For the valiant heart and hand;

In the deadly breach to stand

Far more terrible than tears;

Sorrow's censeless fable hangs

Where the helpless wail for pity

Where, o'er all the fated city,

Where grim laughter masks an anguish

Where the martyrs hide their pangs;

Anxious but to screen from blame,

Women keep the watch unweary,

Grieving for a loved one's shame; While the drunkards, homeward reeling,

Stagger through the silent town,

Oh! we need not wait for chances!

Sin hath borne too bitter fruit :

And the heavens, with pitying glances

Look on men beneath the brute;

Which no healer charms away :

Look on hearts, whose darker morrow Make less stern the dark to-day.

Christian soldier! rise and arm thee!

Take the Spirit's sevenfold shield

Let no coward fears alarm thee,

Fiercer than the fabled giants.

Bid the slaves of sin's excesses

Recreant from this solemn field

Are thy foes of Want and Crime

Haste thee to the strife sublime.

Harken what the Saviour saith

Round the spirits "drawn to death.'

Though they spare from cursing never, Though men hate, deride, condemn,

Cease not from the brave endeavor;

By the heaven that shineth o'er you

By the soul's uncounted worth;

Work to lift and rescue them.

God thy helper, men thy clients!

Look on sorrowfullest sorrows,

Cast their vaunted manhood down.

Getting Ready for the Train.

When they reached the depot, Mr Man and his wife gazed with unspeakable disappointment at the receding train, which was just pulling away from the bridge switch at the rate of a mile a minute. Their first impulse was to run after it: but as the train was out of sight, and whistling for Sagetown before they could act upon the impluse, they remained in the carriage and disconsolately turned the horses' heads homeward.
