EDISON'S SPEAKING PHONOGRAPH.-For a year or more the scientific world has been excited from time to time by the discoveries of Thomas A. Edison, who has made electricity a special duty. One of his first inventions was the automatic telegraph, which was received as quite a marvel. This he followed in turn with the quadruplex and sextuplex system of telegraphy, the carbon telephone, the stock indicator, the electric pen, the air-aphone, and lastly and more wonderful than all the others, the speaking phonograph.— Although his discoveries embrace a far greater range of applications and instruments, these are the ones with which the public are

It was here that our artist caught Mr.

Edison in the act of completing his improve-ments on the latest wonder, the speaking phonograph. This is an instrument that will record and reproduce any words or sounds pronounced or made within the proper distance of the mouthpiece of the apparatus. This apparatus is exceedingly sim-ple. It consists of a cylinder four inches in Eighty thousand porsons visited the Paris diameter and ten inches long upon a shaft.— Exhibition on Sunday.
