Two of the Commissioners request the Board to order an assessment on the Parish and Town of Woodstock, for the support of the poor for the present year, amounting to the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars, together with the costs of assessing and collecting the same. Your Committee are of the opinion that on this point the Board has no discretion as to the amount the Commissioners require, the law making the Commissioners the judges of the amount required. We would therefore recommend that a warrant of assessment be ordered on the Parish and Town of Woodstock, for the support of the poor for the present year, for two thousand five hundred dollars, and situation, by all ages and both sexes, whenever a cathartic, laxative, or alterative may be required. field wished Russia to refuse English mediation in order that he might regard it as rebuff sufficiently objectionable to give him an excuse to declare war is too ridiculous to need comment. If the Premier wanted war he could have found plenty of excuses, and he would be enthusiastically upheld by the nation at large. The peace-at-any-price party is as contemptible in the eyes of England as it always was, and the Liberal Opposition is as weak and divided now as it was when Mr. Gladstone made his stand in the House on the famous "resolutions" The truth is the famous "resolutions" The truth is, nobody wants war, but every dy who has a spark of English pride in his composition is sick of being told by lookers-on that "England daren't fight," that "the Old Country is effete," that "John Bull is in a corner," that it is " England's turn to suffer the horrors and humiliation of defeat." Critics who say these things don't know what they are talking about. England has long since played out her game, and is contented. She wants to keep what she has got and go on her way. European affairs, per se, she is willing to leave to European powers. She malady it is. An exciting incident happened in a recent review of Austrian cavalry by the Emperor and Empress. About 30,000 cavalry were in line and charging down in a mad gallop to salute the sovereigns, when a little four-year-old child, escaping from her mother, ran directly in front of the rushing horses. The Emperor screamed and everybody expected to witness the instant death of the child, when a trooper in the front rank bent forward from his saddle, seized the child without slackening speed and placed her at the saddle-bow. out the volunteer service did not exist.
