It where we generally call things by their right opponents. In a future communication, I names, and where churchmen are called wish to state a few more facts. You next strive to create the impression that the Churchman was the aggressor. The facts of the case are these :- Some years ago the late Colonel Coombes deeded to the Church a piece of land "for the purpose of burial according to the rites and customs of the Church of England." Now, one of these customs is that the burial service is to Government and the Opposition to the be conducted by a churchman, clerical or lay over whom, in case of irregularity, she the inside track, as more is said in their directly opposite Post Office, up stairs. whom she has no control. Whether this preference is right or wrong in principle is not relevant to the question. The church certainly has a right to carry out her princiground against the protest of a churchman present, and when this man persisted in his premises. You ask, Mr. Editor, if this is an evidence.
