Sworn Statement
OF A
BOSTON POLICE OFFICER.
MR. H. R. STEVENS.
Dear Sir:—From exposure I took sick about two years ago with rheumatic fever, from which I suffered about four months. When I recovered from the fever I found myself suffering with pain in my side and constipation, which brought on the piles. I consulted a physician, and paid him over $200 for attending me, and all the while I was gradually growing worse. Then one physician after another was employed, until even the best physicians of Boston had taken my case in hand.
On consultation between several of the leading physicians, they concluded my complaint was asthma and general debility. I had great difficulty in breathing and was unable to require to afford me breath. Through the treatment of one physician I took from 75 to 100 boxes of cathartics, and faithfully tried all the medicine that each physician prescribed. From my long illness, and the vast amount of medicine used to overcome the great pain, my kidneys became badly affected, and I suffered excruciating pain in the small of my back, with great difficulty in passing my urine.
One physician said I was diseased all through my system, and he suggested that he could give me no hope for health. My suffering from indigestion was so great that I was unable to keep any solid food on my stomach, and the whole nature of my food was broken from me.
I also took a prescription from a chemist, English physician, who said my trouble was dyspepsia, and he gave me a bottle of medicine especially prepared for Dyspepsia, and I took it for several days, and it did me no good.
I had used a great deal of medicine from apothecaries, and could never be much helped.

Our Queen and Constitution.
WOODSTOCK, N. B. SATURDAY, MAY 10, 1879.

Poetry.
The Two Lights.
"When I'm a man" is the poetry of youth.
"When I'm a man" is the poetry of old age.
"When I'm a man," the strapping colt, And strives the coming years to see,
"Ah, then I shall be strong and wise, When I'm a man!"

"When I'm young," the old man sighs,
"Bravely the lark and linnets sing Their carol under sunny skies,
When I was young?"

"When I'm a man, I shall be free To guard the right, the truth uphold,"
"When I was young, I bent no knee To power or gold."

"Then shall I satisfy my soul With yonder prize, when I'm a man."
"Too late I found how vain the goal To which I ran."

"When I'm a man these idle days Aside forever shall be flung,
"There was no poison in my joys
When I was young."

The boy's bright dream is all before him,
The man's romance lies far behind.
But we the present and no more, Fate were unkind.

But, brother, toiling in the night,
Still count yourself not all unblest If in the east there gleams a light, Or in the west.

—Blackwood's Magazine.

Select Tale.
Turning the Table.
"Now what a pleasant evening we can have here alone!" said little Mrs.
Grey, dropping the crimson curtains in the cozy sitting-room, and turning to her husband as she spoke. "But I would like to go to the opera," she addressed him, and he looked at her with his dimpled face lengthening as he said, "You told me, you know, you knew, Fred, that I suppose you are tired."

"Yes," yawned her drowsy spouse, from his post upon the sofa, where, with heels erect after the fashion of the masculine world in general, intent on physical and mental comfort, he lay smoking.
"But never mind," finished Rosa, consolingly, "we can go another time, and I will read to you." And she drew nearer the shaded light on the centable, and picked up a book. "Hark! there is the door-bell." And she rose to her feet.

"Stay, I will answer it," said Fred, suddenly forgetting his weariness; and springing up, he went hurriedly into the hall.

"Rosa," he said, presently reappear-ing at the door, "it's Davis; I have promised to go with him to B—street, to see a sick friend of his. You won't be lonely, will you, with so much to entertain?" You told me, you know, you knew, Fred, that I suppose you are tired."

Rosa sat listening till the sound of her footsteps died away.

"There is a little to be read to the evening alone. Oh, dear!" she sighed, disconsolately.

At that moment she espied a bit of paper lying on the carpet, and stooping, picked it up. It ran thus:

"Opera at half-past eight. Will call, Davis."

"Ah!" said Rosa, her brows contracting as she spoke. "That's it!" And she detested the note into the fire. "That devoted Davis! He shall have to entertain the guests springing to her eyes quickly. 'Why didn't he say so if he did not want me to go?'"

"Oh!" she finished. "If I could only go to-night!" And with a little sigh she sat down again, and looked into the fire.

Soon the door-bell rang again.

"Show him in!" was her reply to Katie's announcement, in rich Irish brogue.
"Gentlemen to see ye, meen!" And came at last. He is thrown into the gas, which reaches up to the spectator's knees, not with the view of killing him, but as an exhibition. Lifted out of his vapour bath, he is thrown into a
