So Mr. Sharp, Mr. Sharp, he would be apt to get riled. a person of one idea; third, with childishness from Mr. Sharp soon. and, fourth, with being an astonishing perverter of language. In the present article I intend to show that Mr. Sharp fails to prove a single one of these charges, and that his communication is in no sense a reply to mine in SENTINEL of Jan. 18th. First, Mr. Sharp says I forget that the use of tobacco is not its abuse, and he launches once more into the question of abstract rights; he evidently wishes to get away from the main question under smoke down his throat." Mr. Sharp may inbacco, whether on the footing of an abstract right or upon any other footing, and I repeat that Mr. Sharp's process of reasoning is the be my excuse for thus troubling you. merest quibbling. Mr. S. insinuates that the use of tobacco is childish in the extreme; well if it is there are a great number of grown up children; however I plead not guilty Mr. Sharp quotes a few words of a paragraph of mine, I give the quotation in full, with Mr. Sharp's comments thereon, "Mr Sharp says that I am evidently sincerely of makers of Luton, that government (the British) should interfere in their behalf, and take such measures as would compel the peo ple of the British Empire to buy their especial hats made by these people of Luton, irrespec-tive of fashion, material or price, and that the inhabitants of said empire refusing to buy should be subject to a fine in the shape of duty." Mr. Sharp, in what I have just quot ed, makes a bad mistake, be compounds the words British Empire, with England proper Surely the gentleman (Mr. Sharp) is aware that the British government does not frame s tariff for the Colonies. It (the British government) has neither the right nor the power. Our Dominion government frames a tariff to suit itself; the Australian Colonics do the same; this straw bonnet question only conconcerns the people of the British Islands. That is, this straw bonnet question does not concern the whole empire, but only those of the British Islands. Upon the foregoing Mr Sharp comments as follows, "can forgetfulness Total 6 trees,

> OUR ENGLISH LETTER. Liverpool, Feb. Ist, 1879. The frost still lasts, nor can we discern any signs of its abatement. In fact the weather is becoming colder, and as I write I remember that to-day, the first of February, is the one which our American friends prophesied as the coldest of the season. And they are right. It is indeed the bitterest day we have had for many a year. Not a morsel of snow to protect the plants and seeds; nothing but hard dry frost and a piercing wind. But still they skate. Thousands who who never knew what it was to stand on acmes are this year to be seen gliding up and down the ice, evidently determined to avail themselves of the privileges which the long frost has afforded them. Young and old are there, it makes no difference, for once a little confidence is gained success follows, and then their enjoyment is complete.

able misery to others. No out door labor can be performed, and the consequence is that thousands who depend on the week's wages for the week's food have either to turn paupers or starve. Pauperism is increasing at an alarming rate. You cannot walk along the streets without being accosted by half starved men and women who ask that you Mr. President and Honorable Gentlemen of would give them "just one penny" to buy a morsel of food. As you look at them you think that words are not necessary, for the hollow cheeks and the sunken eyes tell their own sad tale of want and torture. The poor have economized and pinched until all is gone and they must either starve or go into the work-house. The soup kitchens have performed a powerful work in alleviating the distress, but I am afraid that they will soon have to succumb, for the taxpayers are discovering that they cannot support these eleemosynary institutions when the compulsory poor-rate is so enormously great.
