Miscellancous

A happier man than Mr. Baringer never whistled himself home. Everything had gone well with him through the day. He Mr. Baringer was pretty confident he could get out of paying tax altogether, on the ground of erroneous as sessment. And then, finally, a policeman had shot a neighbor's dog. Everything conspired to make Mr. Baringer feel happy as the heart of spring. He whistled all the way home, and he trolled a merry roundelay in a deep rich wheelbarrow tone as he skipped up the stairs, he smiled as he entered the hall, and there the song died entered the hall, and there the song died away, and the smile went out of the silent Delancey Tempkins, dated 7th May, 1868, on
