JANUARY 1st, 1879.

Of Hope, the promiser and mild content,

Parent of joy! thyself from Eden given,

On me, to-day, thy benison bestow,

Aid me thy trophied story to rehearse,

Unheeded, rolls the din of horrid war,

Poluting brood, of most prolific seed,

Truth to deform and virtue to debase.

Leaving behind vast hecatombs of slain-

Not even stay where, in familiar guise,

Except to drop a sympathetic tear mourned.)

Of English Alice, whom all grace adorned,

Stillest the murm ring plaint and calms't each

Pointing, beyond earth's perils and alloys,

Of ghastly, base and vicious, they may tell

Of things that rise before the passing gaze,

And silent be when there's no room for

Holds the civilized world, with its bravery.

Just here there obtrudes the reflection

Parenthetic; having made selection,

That iron-heeled general depression.

In most stern and particular slavery,

In honor as the Brothers Cheeryble--When traders of high and low standing

On bankruptey's fiats are stranding,

For credit and cash form the varnish.

Provided that peace wields the brush

Be thankful there's one bank that's stable

To give life its gloss and its gush,

To meet its engagements still able,

'Tis the very old bank of the soil.

I would tell you in these rhymes,

But one Lockyer, sage of science,

Puts the world's wise at defiance :

Is a fraud; that star and planet,

And he'll soon by word and pen,

Made and taught and proved for ages

Are no more what they say than granite,

Show them simply hydrogen.
Thus these hard times through which we

May soon be proved mere hy-dro-gas,

By which to gold will turn the stone

Or else some simple way be shown

In Europe, there's little to sing,

The elements, restless, below

The surface, may in fury burst, Like volcano whose fires long nurst,

At last breaks with savagest roar,

Czar's, Emperor's, Sultan's and such,

Take the uppermost place in the soul

And serfs in whose bosom and brains

Then rise and, beneath outraged feet,

France! may her fame and greatness still i

Has closed her Exposition which, to peace,

England still flourishes fair, firm and free,

While strikes and banks and trade disaster

But brightness, on the gen'ral gloom,

And England still maintain the van

Spreading abroad an influence serene,

The Yankees still hold on their way,

God bless old England and God bless

They've got their greenbacks up to gold,

Of good and bad and middling

Will help trade. After didling

Will break, the horizon illume,

In all that blesses, honors man,

Of cuteness, enterprise, display,

A good while, over that award, And swearing it was 'tarnal hard,

To pay so for the fishes,

Millions, we mark the bill paid, laugh

Turn to our own, our loved, country;

And give them our best wishes.

From over the borders, from over the sea.

Turn to this land of our fathers' pride-

Land we from sires right worthy inherit;

By guarding their honor, enlarging its fame,

To hand it untarnished in deed, as in name,

May be "upward and onward" "excelsior"

To those that come after, so that its career

They've counted us five and a half

A specie basis that, I'm told,

Although disturbed by much perplexity,

"Jingo,"

Trample down tyrant and chain,

And rights long refused will regain

To deluge with discord and gore.

Can not be depended on much,

(For pastime they shoot at a King)

Now peace, but to-morrow, heigh ho

Of the cause of stringent times;

Casting shade, like a funeral pall,

Of distrust, gloom, dismay over all

WHAT KIND OF FOWLS .- Farmers should re-stock their poultry yards every two or three years, for the old breeds being bred inand-in, soon run out and become unprofitable. It is not every farmer, however, that can afford to buy full-blood fowls of any kind sufficient to stock the place. In order to work into pure-blood chickens, there are several modes of procedure, all very good, because very cheap. The first is to buy a cou-ple of thorough-bred roosters and turn them
