the County, weathered the tides of adversity, continue it in the same position. Its errors with sufficient plainness? they need not be recapitulated. Its few virtues might be recounted did not its innate modesty forbid.

The country newspaper of to-day occupies a peculiar position. Time was, and within the period of the SENTINEL's existence, when the people of rural districts were compelled to resort to the local paper for not only the news of the day but, as well, for their literary and general reading matter. These people felt then-were forced to feel-under positive obligations to those who catered for them through the press. It was part of their ordinary life, and the supply could only be obtained from one direction. City papers were then simply local and dispensed in their own sections of country. Daily papers were not published in the Province, and if they had been the facilities for transit were not such that they could be conveyed with sufficient promptness to the country districts far away. Now, however, the daily papers of Counties within twelve hours of their publication, while the weeklies compiled from sers. Not only so, but these latter have to

To be and keep informed with re spect to these subjects the public must stil look to the local press.

The conducting of a country newspape has, connected with it, to some minds, satis factory features, but apart from the severe struggles, to maintain it in existence, ex perienced we venture to say by every pro prietor of such a paper, there is connected with it a weight of responsibility irksome a degree. Such a paper should be independ ent, and independence brings its own reward in plenty of kicks from those with whose views it does not agree, and faint praise and few coppers from those with whose opinions it happens to be in accord. In fact its independence is a convenient commodity for those who at special times can use it to advantage.
