The first of these is the Empress who is kept alive only by the use of oxygen and ether. and who, when she is not slumbering, is continually saying to those around her, "How happy must be the people who enjoy good health." Her frame has been reduced to a mere skeleton, her limbs and more especially the lower portions of her body being reduced to mere skin and bone. The s and illustrious invalid is Prince Gortschakoff, the first cause of whose illness was an attack of indigestion. After him in the relative gravity of his case comes the Emperor, and it is on him that the attention of the German court is specially concentrated. Though he is able to move about and cannot be said to be exactly in the hands of the doctors, he is, according to the Emperor William, the sickest of the three. The following facts concerning him have been communicated to me by a friend who has access to court circles: It is well known, says my informant, that the Emperor Alexander is in such a state of prestration that he is almost incapable of transacting any business. He is crushed by terror and for several days after the attempt upon his life at the Winter Palace he did not quit his apartments. In order, however, to keep up his habit of a daily walk after breakfast, he had the upper squares of the windows of a sort of salon opened. In this purified atmosphere, wrapped in his cloak, he walked briskly up and down for exercise. Now escorted by eight Cossacks, preceded and surrounded by numerous vehicles in which police agents are seated, he drives to the residence of his son, the Czarewitch, whose garden Fellows' Leeming's Essence will cure serves him for a promenade. There he walks Spavins, Ringbones, Curbs, Splints, Sprains, about, attended by his faithful Chasseur and Swellings and Stiff Joints, on horses. Price followed by three of his favorite dogs. All this is a source of the greatest anxiety to the members of the Imperial family of Prussia. The Prussians are too provident and long-sighted not to have taken the measure of the Czarewitch, and the estimate they have formed of him is anything but a flattering one. They say he is narrow-minded and indifferent, although well-behaved and religiously disposed. In fact a sort of Louis the 16th on a large scale. This is not promising for the political pregress of Russia as compared with that of the other European nations. The supreme executive commission does not excite much attention, and yet General Loris Melikoff, its chief, has a grand object in view, and that is to succeed Prince Gortschakoff.
