Beneath the salf same lid they sleep, The very self-same watch they keep, Together, in the earth, down deep-Above them blooms the heather. Threescore years and more ago They were two children, playing here; In those shining meadows there, With other flowers like these as fair, They played and lived without a care-They grew together year by year.

of washing dishes.' Threescore years, nay less ago, His hand clasped her's in mute request; She told him "yes," in glances fleet, His lips sought her's in kissings sweet They two were wed in love complete: With love they lined their little nest.

Threescore years, nay less, ago, God gave them children, five, one more Some had his and some her face, All grew strong in might and grace And all grew great in love apace-But all their children went before.

In peace they lived, unknown of wrath; With little homely cares and joys, And ploughing there and sowing here And laughing quick away a tear. And teaching them their God to fear-So bringing up their girls and boys.

Just to hear them and love them well. And, when they're grown to hear the bel Ring them out of sight with a knell— So, be left together, alone. Four eyes closed, four ice cold hands Clasped close in safest death; They lived together, died the same.

But just to see them one by one Carried out over the old door-stone,

When I am ready to begin fattening the animals, I feed dry meal or corn, and a little while after they have eaten it, give them a little sour milk if I have it, and if not, a little clear cold water. This method of feeding saves labor and food and consequently saves expense. The dry meal will stay on the stomach until it is entirely digested One hundred thousand emigrants have while wet or sloppy food will pass through the animal more quickly, and before it has Hon. Mr. Pope, Minister of Marine and had time to do half service. I have tried a have finally settled down upon this as the best. But you have got to begin early in the use of uncooked food, for a pig that has been brought up on boiled potatoes, will often, when he is grown, turn up his nose at raw ones. The use of dry meal for fattening, however, can be begun this fall, no matter

FEEDING HOGS.—I have seen a good deal, of late, in some of the papers I take, about the best way of feeding hogs and the advantages of cooking food for them. I am inclined to think that the chief reason why farmers continue to cook food for their pigs, is because their fathers did so before them, and they themselves have never reasoned at all upon the subject. My experience has taught me a different lesson. I begin to feed my pigs when small on uncooked food of all kinds, such as corn fodder, apples, green grass and weeds, potatoes, etc., with a little water and sour milk to drink. Sour milk is better for them than sweet, for it gives them

an appetite and keeps them healthy so that they will grow faster.

A WORD FOR THE GIRLS .- A great deal has been said and written concerning the rights of farmers' boys, but nothing about yet the daughters do not receive a dollar from month to month. Why should this difference exist between the farmer's girl and the boy? The former is quite as much entitled to a reward for services as the latter. In truth the farmer's girl is frequently the may be the pride of the family, and regarded to pass through the mails free. On the as- is expected from her in ten thousand smaller sassination of her husband she received a features of home life. Why then, should she not be encouraged with at least as much pay as the boy?
