BELIEF IN WITCHCRAFT .- HOW THE OLD-TIME SUPERSTITION HAS BEEN HELD powers appear to us at the present day with which witchcraft in former times was credited, such powers seem never to have been denied or disputed by the great minds of the past. A witch was all that was abominable, and to be held in the strongest loathing; yet few had the wisdom or the courage to contradict the possibility of her exercising the arts she pretended to. The judge, as he Bargains! Bargains! passed sentence upon the condemned women, tembled lest her fell gaze should bring upon him and his household sorrow or death. The yelling crowd, as it half-stripped her to undergo the water-ordeal, shuddered as it saw upon her exposed bosom the marks which, it was supposed, proved that she allowed her "familiar" to draw upon her life's blood. The villagers who went miles out of their way WE HAVE JUST RECEIVED A FULL to avoid her haunts never for one moment halicred that the chief of fear was powerless to work them evil, and was either a half-man woman, the victim of a hideous delusion, or else the
